and had always enjoyed a merry Christmas until the father, who was employed in an iron foundry in a little town in Western Pennsylvania, was accidentally killed while at work. Mrs. Dunbar and her three childen, Jim, William and Nellie, now composed the family.

The father's place in the foundry was given to Jim, aithough he was only fifteen cars old, and had no experience other than that gathered when stopping to see his father occasionally. The men with whom he was to work anew they would have to help him. The officers of the company, who had been very kind in assisting the family, had previous to this time falled to secure the renewal of several large contracts, and were further embarrassed by a recent robbery of a large amount of bonds from the sate. Detectives had been put on the case but failed to capture, the guilty parties. Time passed and the company's condition began to brighten up a little. The Dunbar family were struggling along as best they could. Willie carried Jim's dinner to him when the diminished larder could afford such a meal.

One day in December a kind neighbor of the Dunbars presented the widow with a pair

One day in December a kind neighbor of the Dunbars presented the widow with a pair of rabbits. She cooked them, and part of one furnished a meal for the family at home. A nice dinner was prepared for Jim, the mother in her pleasure remarking: "Won't he be surprised when he sees this?" But who was to carry the dinner? She had never thought of that! Willie was laid up with a sprained ankle and could not walk, and Neilie was too amall and young to go such a great distance.

tance,
"I can take Jim's dinner to-day, mamma," said the little girl who had just entered the

"Why you are so small, and it is such a long distance, that I'm afraid you would lose your way," said the mother. "Ob, no: I won't get lost. I know the road, and I've been there two or three times. Please, let me take it to day, won't you mamma ?" "But are you sure you know the road ?"

"Yes'um, sure."
"Yery well, then, put on your hood and coat, and I will have the basket ready for

The luncheon was prepared, put into the The luncheon was prepared, put into the basket, a napkin placed over it, and Nellie, safer kissing her mother, tripped off with it, humming a tune. The distance was about three miles, and the roads were very perplexing in some places. Nellie finally reached the road leading to the foundry and walking on soon stood confused in view of a dozen such foundries as she was looking for. After gazing at them in perplexity for some time she was undecided between the several nearest her, but after pausing a moment she wended her but after pausing a moment she wended her tiny footsteps to the entrance of the first. It was a dilapidated looking affair, one story high. She knocked, but no one responded. Again she rapped louder than before, and still no one answered. Nellie walked around the building to the rear. A small door was partly open, she pushed it open further and peeped in. It looked so very dark inside and was so quiet that she thought no one worked there, and she turned to go sway, when a boy who had been watching her approached and said.

"Who are you looking for, sissy?"

"Why, I'm looking for my brother Jim," she replied, "I have his dinner for him."

"Well, don't you know which foundry he works in?" Again she rapped louder than before, and

"No, but maybe you know him and could tell me? His name is Jim Dunbar."

"Jim Dunbar, why, I know him well. We have a snow-ball fight every day." Won't you please tell me where I can find

"Won't you please tell me where I can find him?"
"I will if you will do something for me."
"I'd do it if its not wrong. What is it?"
"You go through that little door," said the boy, pointing to the half-opened door of the foundry, "and get my rubber bail; it rolled in there to day."
"Why don't you go in yourself;"
"Because I am too big."
"Well, you hold my basket and I will try to get inside and get it for you."
It looked very dark and forbidding inside, but Neilie was a brave little girl. She possessed a boy's spirit of adventure, and was a idom frightened off from following her ruclinations. After some time timal shrink. melinations. After some time timid shrink-ing at first she was soon in the foundry: the cowardly boy, for coward he was meanwhile congratulating himself upon the result of his

After Nellie had been in the foundry for After Neille had been in the foundry for some time the boy looked in to see what was keeping her. She was almost at the other end of the old building, and had just started to run towards the jdoor. In a few seconds she was outside, and then to the watching boy's amazement set off running as fast as her little legs would carry her. her little legs would carry her.

The boy stood in open eyed amazement and watched her, still holding her basket and wondering it she had found his rubber ball. When he had conquered his surprise at Nel-lie's strange action he started after her and at length came up with her. She had stopped running by now and was walking, muc of breadth. "Where is my ball"" he asked.

"I could not find it; but you show me where my brother works and I will tell him to get it."

The boy pointed out the foundry and Nei-

He hurried to it, and soon found her brother Jim, who was surprised to see her, and more so, when he discovered that she was very so, when he discovered that she was very much excited. Drawing down his head she told him she had discovered a big tin box in the old foundry, containing a lot of crisp paper like big bank notes.

This information, of course, caused Jimmy

This information, of course, caused Jimmy to become excited himself, but collecting his thoughts he went direct to the company's office and informed Mr. Plerson, the president, of his sister's discovery. The gentleman, with Jim and Neille as guide, at once went back to the old building. Passing hastly through the small aperture, with Neille eading, they were directed to the spot where leading, they were directed to the spot where the box was hidden. Mr. Pierson was over-come with joy and surprise. Hastily raising the box he opened it and started back, when the valuable bonds that had been stolen from the company were displayed to his eager eyes in the same condition as when they had last been placed in the safe in the office. Uttering a cry of joy, he quickly ran over the packager of valuable paper, and was further overjoyed to find that none was missing. Meanwhile the children stood by, their honest, childish faces lighted up with the pleasure at the thought of having done the company a service. What more need be said?

The president of the company called a meeting of the directors and reported to the good fortune that had befallen the company through the instrumentality of little Nellie. A goodly sum was unanimously appropriated to Mrs. Dunbar to save unt! Nellie should need it, and a further sum was given to her for immediate needs.

What a merry Christmas the Dunbar family had then.

What a merry Christmas the Dunbar family had then.

What fat turkey and rich pastry disappeared down their hungry throats! Mrs. Dunbar, happier than she had been for years, smiled upon Nelile and called her the little heroine. Jim was looked after by the officers of the company, and, being a steady boy and ambitious to learn, was soon promoted to a higher position, and as his brother grew he too was piaced in the foundry and earned good wages. The Dunbars prospered and in time became one of the first lamilies in importance in the village, and all came about through Little Nell's find.

Growth of Nursery Trees. From the Country Gentleman. Purchasers of young orchard trees usually desire those of handsome and thritty growth, and nurserymen in order to suit them raise those sorts which are handsome upright growers, among which are some of our finest varieties. The Northern Spy apple for example, as soon as known, came rapidly into cultivation, and there is no doubt that the handsome growth of the trees materially aided its introduction. But there are some others, of much excellence, the feeble or crooked growth of which have thrown them in the background, among which are the Early Joe, one of the most delicious summer appies, and the Red Canada, an excellent winter variety. If the Melon was as fine a grower as the Gravenstein, it would doubtless be better known. The slender growth of the Jonathan has retarded its introduction in those regions where the fruit is particularly fine. It is so likewise with pears. If the Bartlett were as crooked a grower as the Giffard and Winter Nells, it is questionable if it would be as universally popular. Handsome trees may be grown of these crooked sorts, by grafting them at standard height on straight growers. Take the Buffum, for instance. It any one has more than he wants of this beautiful bearer of rather poor pears, he may make them particularly valuable by working upon them the terooked Winter Nells, or the feeble Josephine de Malines. the handsome growth of the trees materially "Conspiracies no sooner should be formed than executed," and a cold should no sooner be taken, than a bottle of Dr. Butt's Cough Syrup should be bought and used according to the di-rections.

Purge away the old, diseased and worn out body, said Dr. Brandreth. Replace the dis-charged matters of the system with good, sim-ple food and thus build up a new and sound body in place of one feeble and diseased. Every man should know that he must be "renewed at least one in two or three years, else he would soon break down completely. This renewing process is easily brought about by purging with Beaxpears's Pile. They put new life into old bodies.
