LANCASTER JANUARY & 1887.

The Inter-State Commerce Bill. The Senate is very likely to pass the inter-state commerce bill, without minterial change; and the House will do likewise. There is a very reasonable certainty that the bill will become a law at this session. Railroad men are in a good deal of a fever over it, most of them belleving that it will be injurious to their interest. The opinion however is not unanimous. The Northern Pacific railroad makes an energetic protest against it, because of the disadvantage it will in competition with its unchained neighbor, the Pacific railway of Canada; and there is substance in its complaint. No doubt it will not be well for the roads that Canadian roads compete with, that they should be under restrictions discoulty is met in the bill in the privilege that their rivals are free from. But this rated lecture the necessity for such action is evaent.

The objectors to the bill confine themselves to asking its amendment. There is no demand from any important quarter, seemingly, for its entire suppression Even in railroad circles it is conceded that the commissionership established is likely to be beneficial, and the publication of rates is universally approved. The objections to the bill lie against two of its provisions; one which prohibits pooling and another which prohibits a greater charge for a longer than a shorter haul in the same direction. The last provision seems obviously just and the opposition to it shows how greatly demoralized is the railroad sense as to its duty to the public. The idea that a carrying company may charge what it pleases and do as it pleases, with a sole eye to its own advantage, is so deeply grounded as to seem ineradicable. So that the railroad manager cannot, for the life of him, see that there is anything wrong in his charging a greater price for carrying goods from Pittsburg to New York, than he charges for carrying the same goods from Chicago to New York. This is all that this bill prohibits. It allows as great a charge from Pittsburg as from Chicago; but no greater, and this is declared to be ruinous oppression of the railroad; and fanciful cases are stated in great numbers to show how badly the new law will work. The general sense is that if railroad business is so managed as to be damaged by the need of charging no more for a less service than for a greater, the management needs speedy reformation. The other prohibition of the bill, that of railroad pooling, is not so clearly equitable and may be found in practice to be injurious. While competition is the life of business and is needed to insure proper treatment of customers, it is equally true that the public interest is not served by the excessive supply of business facilities, upon which interest must be carned, and that therefore there may be such a thing as too much competition. One railroad will suffice for a community, if that railroad can be held to fair rates for its service. This may possibly be secured more effectually by government control than by multiplying railroads; which when so multiplied need to pool their business to secure living rates. The country is in that condition now. There are too many trunk lines and they do not have all the business they can do. They combine together to maintain paying rates on through and long hauls of traffic. Such combination is a necessity to them; and it is this which the proposed bill prohibits. Whether it can do so, without supplying some other means of securing living rates for long hauls to the railroad company, is the question. It is not for the country's interest that its railroads should be bankrupted. And it is not for the interest of the country along railroad lines that it should be charged heavy rates to make up for the light rates forced by competition on other traffic.

But whatever defects the law may develop in practice can be remedied, and there should be no hesitation in instituting the experiment.

Alas, Poor Cooper ! Brother Cooper comes down; he come sadly, but he comes. He has looked so lovingly upon the sweet delights and ducats of the rich and pleasant place of secretary of state, that he finds it hard to part with the expectation of its enjoyment. He tears himself from it with very obvious regret ; and seemingly only summoning courage for the job because of a hope that the severance is not forever, but only until the end of the term for which he has been elected senator. He writes to the governor that he does not "now" claim the office, because of the row about his constitutional ineligibility, but he shows a readiness to promptly swoop for it as soon as he is loose.

They say that Brother Cooper feels much aggrieved that the governor held out to him s) long the delusive phantom of hope that he would be chosen. The governor was so earnestly desirous of having him in his official family, and so ardent in his search for a way of construing the constitution to kt him in to the table, that Brother Cooper never doubted that he would take him in; and he set to work himself to search the constitution and obtain authorities whereby the governor's act would be fortified. He made a luminous exposition of the whole matter a few days ago in his own newspaper, wherein he showed how the constitution was constructed for the especial purpose of making him secretary of state, and how its spirit clearly did so, but how some rascally enemy of his had falsely worded the official draft in the vain hope of his undoing.

Brother Cooper is not so clear about this spirit; and even feel tempted to think that the spirit has deserted everything in the world. He is not even consoled by the profuse and unanimous sympathy of all his fellow-politicians from Quay down, who shed tears with him over his cruel disappointment. The poor wheel horse of the party has lost his reward. The heat and burthen of the day has been for years for Cooper, and all the dirty work has been for his hands. He looked upon the senatorship and Quay took it. He grasps for the secretaryship and it eludes him. Alas, poor Cooper!

Some Misers.

While relatives are quarreling over the wealth of miser Paine comes the news of the death of miser Perry and his cousin under the most revolting circumstances, These two cases show such an unreasonable passion for hoarding money that they must be looked upon as instances of a peculiar form of insanity, but it would puzzle experts to draw the line between the same and in sane in this matter of hearding. How many people who boast of strong, common sense can explain clearly just why they make themselves miserable for the sake of gaining a little more? They may say that they do it for the sake of others, but will be ready to admit that their personal experience has led them to believe that happiness is a matter independent of wealth, and that t will probably be better for those they wish to benefit if they have to make their own way in the world. Their real motive s avarice, though they may cheat themselves with the unreasoning belief that it is a higher feeling of anxiety for the welfare of relatives or friends. The difference between them and these misers lies only in e fact that the latter had thrown every loak from their vice, and careless of public opinion, had given it full swing until like all vices it had wiped out every vestige of self respect, repressed all nobler aspiraions, and left the victim in a state of unacy. For surely a man is crazy who dies from cold and hunger while rolling in wealth, of which a very little would give him warmth and food.

The near publication is an-nounced of an edition of Mr. Blaine's speeches in Congress, containing also a large selection of those addressed to political meetings, including selections from those delivered in his presidential campaign of 1884, to gether with his diplomatic dispatches, which outline his South American policy and discuss American rights at the 1sthmus against the Clayton-Bulwer treaty. The cable brings several items of news eross the water that contrast strongly. The Prince of Wales gave a dramatic enter-tainment in the great hall of his country seat. The full company of the Criterion theatre gave a performance on a stage built for the occasion and the audience comprised a host occasion and the audience comprised a host of celebrides who have been entertained by the prince for a whole week. A royal box had been built and the formal entry of the royal family and dignitaries of the realm was quite as theatrical in its way as anything on the stage. The Princess of Wales walked in in a stately manner, dressed in a ruby veivet robe and wearing a diamond tiara. With her was the Princess Louise, (Marchioness of Lorne), who were white satin and pearls. Then came another generation of princes and princesses and when the curtain arose the blaze of jewels and the wealth of toilets of the audience was dazzling. The Prince of Wales were full evening dress covered with jeweled decorations. Now turn from that picture to this: A few miles away in London, crowds of unemployed workingmen, suffering from cold and hunger, assembled in front of the offices of the local government board appealing for relief. The president of the board calmiy told them that he could promise nothing. They raised a shout of indignant remonstrance and marched in a body to Trafalgar Square, where they passed resolutions protesting against the spathy of the government. The shop-keepers barricaded their stores, but the meeting dispersed without violence and the crowd went home to starve and freeze and to learn from the morning papers the particulars of the Prince of Walos' entertainment. If these people ever get tired of passing reaolutions there will be warm times in London.

Accomping to R. G. Dun & Ca's weekly review of trade, the new year opens with higher prices. Wheat has advanced 1% cts. this week on sales of 25,000,000 bushels; oil has advanced 1 cent on sales of 10,000,000 barrels; cotton rises a sixteenth with moderate transactions; hogs, coffee, iron and sliver are higher; corn and cats have been a little weaker, and large realizing by foreigners has checked the tendency to advance in stocks. But the expansion of currency, and investment of large dividends received and profits realized, tend to lift prices for the present to spite of fears regarding legislation.

Since August lat, the treasury has added $22,497,688 to the gold certificates outstand-ing, and $29.682,626 to the silver certificates, and about $7,000,000 to the standard silver dollars. Bank circulation has decreased $10,029,461, and the legal tenders not in the treasury have diminished $1,230,184. Thus a net addition of about $48,000,000 to the currency has been made in five months-over 5); per cent, not counting the addition to gold in circulation. Following an expansion of about $500,000,000 mince 1878, this makes the effectation per capita the largest ever recorded.

How nicely they manage duels in France! One of the guests at the unveiling of the Bartholdi statue was M. Thomegeux who wrote home to the editor of La France that the French consul in New York was extremely unpopular. Soon after this consul home, and on his arrival the editor withdrew statements it had made on the authority of Thomegeux. The latter, who is a famous duelist, at once challenged the editor and a duel was arranged with target pistols at twenty paces. The editor, "M. Nicot, is an unusually lean man and M. Thomegeux stout and tail. The former fired first, his bullet striking the ground almost at his own feet; M. Thomegeux fired between the words two and three and missed. According to the terms agreed upon but one shot was exchanged, and after the proces verbaux was signed, M. Thomegeux, who declined to shake hards with his adversary, returned to Paris with his seconds; the other parties remained to breakfast at a famous little eating place on the bank of the river.

THESUPHEMB COURT

The supreme court has passed upon two important questions in deciding the suit of Wil. iam A. Shaw against the city of Allegheny. Shaw bought a property at sheriff's sale and afterward was required to pay nearly $500 for back taxes in order to prevent a second sale of the property. He sued the city to recover this money. The case theolved two points, first, whether in buying the property at a sale axes, and secondary, whether his subsequenpayment of those taxes was not legally payment of those taxes was not regary a voluntary payment.

The court held that if the property was sold for a sum insufficient to pay the taxes it was the fault of the tax receiver or collector. whose duty it was to see that it was tild up to a sufficient price. The court also held that the payment of the taxes, under the circumstances, was not a voluntary payment and that the plaintiff was entitled to recover them back. The case was decided off hand by the lower court in order to get it to the by the lower court in order to get it to the supreme court as soon as possible. In commenting upon this fact Judge Sterrett says: "The practice of unduly speeding causes through courts of original jurisdiction and disposing of them without consideration or without full consideration for the purpose of bringing them into this court is a growing bringing them into this court is a growing evil that ought to be corrected."

Passes Herself Off For a Man Cook.

From the Pittsburg Leader.

An East Liberty female in the guise of a man has raised quite a stir in the little town of Butler. About two months ago, it is said. of Butler. About two months age, it is said, a handsome young fellow of about medium height, with a feminine face and walk and voice, applied at the Lowry house as a cook under the name of Frack Riffa. Froving competent, the young man, or woman, as she has turned out to be, was employed, and was kept in the position until to-day, when the hotel dispensed with her services for cause. Although attired in the habitiments of s man, yet the general appearance of the handsome cook was that of a woman, although so well did she masquerade in her torrowed garments that the suspicions of the curious were quickly allayed, and in all the curious were quickly allayed, and in all the time that she was at the Lowry house, there was not more than a suspecton that she was not what she seemed and indeed all thoughts woman, and that by masquerating in men's ciothes she was able to demand men's wages. During his or her stay in Butler he or she During his or her stay in Butler he or she was very circumspect, aithough she is said to be very fond of latter's society, and is said to have been a charming dancer and a very companionable person generally. She was very gentlemanly for a time to the other employes of the hotel, eight young latter, none of whom thought other than the cook was a resiman instead of a mage-believe one. But lately she had become overbearing in her treatment of the others. The young ladies employed as dining room girls had complained to the proprietor of the way the cook had been imposing on them, and as it was easier to get one cook that eight dining room girls the man-woman cook was relieved of her position.
