BROLAND'S ROTTEN ARISTOCHACY. Oulda's " Strigting Remark About De Present Naureous Condition.

From a N. Y. Sun Cable Letter. In the upper part of England's social ple rumors of divorces play the role of war ru-mors in the society of nations. The divorce court corridors and the ciub smoking room are full of them. The English newspapers are trembling between a desire to tell what they know and their respect for the very savage libel laws, and are full of dark hints involving almost any one of importance in the kingdom. Enough is positively known, however, to inspire a sincere disgust for the aristocrary, which calls upon the people to look up to it, and renders singularly appropriate to England a recent remark of the gifted Outda, who has been in London for a while, pleasantly shocking society with white, pleasantly shocking society with smart sayings. "People of intellect," says this lady, "are above all law. Marriage is only suitable for the lower classes."

Gossip such as in America would disgrace the servants' hall fills the sir of drawing rooms and passes between hunters as they canter side by side. But for the fox's habit of keeping out of hearing as much as possible his entire race might soon, for very shame, turn several shades redder. One story which may fill a court room very soon, story which may fill a court room very soon, pictures a man looked up to by England's millions kneeding at the feet of a man whom be hat wronged and begging forgiveness. Another has this same man's 19-year-old son involved in a diagraceful intrigue with the young wife of an old man who had been his iriend. Still a third story, the property of dend. Still a third story, the property of clay's Conty Fore, claims special attention om the fact that eight co-respondents are to figure in the case. Another case, which would have particularly concerned Ameri-cans, has been to my positive knowledge compromised with the greatest difficulty. Lady brooks, it is said, is to appear in court with no less than fourteen co-respondents, the number of these in isshionable cases being ever on the increase, like that of bridesmands at weddings. It is de rigueur count in the number the now almost professional co-respondent, the Duke of Maribor ough, besides Sir Charles Dike, and possi-bly a more august one. The two latter, with Mr. Gladstone, might have been called at a late prolongest trial with as much presumpthe justice as these who were summoned and appeared, and the one who, being summened, desilned to do so. The broaks case would have come on ere this had not the Campbelis slipped in beforehand with prompt and successful slacrity. Lady Brooke, who was a Miss Maynard, is an ex-Brooke, who was a Miss Maymard, is an ex-pressely beautiful woman and quite young. The example given by the class of Argyll may not impossibly be fullowed by another and more flustrious couple belonging to the same leadly, and if the wrath of the queen was deep at the hest trial it will be all the more litter in proportion, as and of the parties is more cleanly allied with herself.
