A White Home Opinion.

From the Baltimore & metican. One of Mrs. Cleveland's most enthusiast dmirers is Jerry, the sable factotum of the White House, who is to be seen by the fresenter at any and all hours bent upon the atthiut discharge of his duties. The nature of Jerry's vocation is like the famed plume of Navarre-ever in sight in the thickest of the fray ; for armed with a pail of water and a long handled brush for cleaning the windows, or the all powerful broom, he esemu ubiquitous. He is a tail, fine looking negro, with gray bead and agreenble face, obliging dows, or the all-nowseful broom, he seems ubiquitous. He is a tail, fine looking negro, with gray head and agreeable faces, obliging in manuer and never so busy but that he can stop for a pleasant word with any one who may chance to question him upon his favorite subject—the fair young mistress of the White House. Moniton the magic name and Jerry is all attention in a moment. Down goes the pail of water and broch, as resting one hand on his hip, the jolly old "Tom and Jerry," as he is familiarly called, perhaps himself for a glowing culogium. "Fore de Lord of she ain" just de beautifui-lest young creatur lever not eyes do. You just oughter see her steppin' around de bouse smillin' and hummin' away to herself when she thinks dere ain't nobody to hear. But I hears her, and I just stands and watebes whar she hes been long after she glis out tr might. If the president had er take a voy-age 'round de world he couldn't never er found anybody ter best her, 'cause she ain't to be beat nowhar. How do she do in de house, yer say ? Well, I guess jist most like anybody else, it she is de fust lady in de land. Sometimes I see her comin' down de stairs ; so jist ter have a better look at her I manters out in de hailway, and den jist son saunters out in de hallway, and den jiet soo saunters out in de hallway, and den jus soon as abs soks her pretty eyes on me abs smalles en says, 'Good mornin', Jerry,' just as though she was real gisd ter see me. Jen che goes on, but, somehow after dat things don't never seem no trouble, 'cause I keeps er thinkin' of dat smile. My! but she do set er beap by de president; and he-Lordy -he seem ter think der an't nutbin' ever was like ber auf no wonder. 'sause when set or beap by de president; and he-Lordy -he seem ter think der ain't nutbin' ever was like her, and no wonder, 'cause when she sees him er comin' and silcks her head kinder on one side es het talk to him, I teil you what, sir, she takes de place. Yes, in-deed, she's always de same, an' hes a pleas-ant word for each of de serbants; and what I likes, she don't never seem ter fergit der mane, but call em jist es preity es one could wish. Somstlines I gits ter studying 'boat her when I sees de big crowds is waltin' ter git in ter receptions, and wonders et any er dem could hold a candle ter her. But no, sah, dat person who could do so ain't never yet come inter de White House,' cause every day I think she grows sweeter and pretiter. At tust, when she come herr, seem like she was sorter shy when de people stared so hard es she git in de carriage tu go drivin'. Den somstime her face flush up and she sorter give a little run from de door to the carriage et she was alone. Hawkins, he see 'er comin' and I guess he'd know how she feel, 'cause he give dem horses one powerful jerk and takes 'em a spinni' out de gate and down the avenue. But she done got used to it now, and doant mind no more ner nurtin'. I teil you, it certanity do make a mighty it now, and doant mind no more ner nurtin I tell you, it certainly do make a mighty heap er difference when she's in de house and when he stays out to the country place ; things gits mighty loneenme here. But, Lord, I might stand here er hour talking bout dat beautifuliest young creeter and never git no work done." And so, with many an inward chuckle and smile of mainfaction over the pleasant memories awakened, Jerry shoulders his broom and reluctantly tears himself away.

A Meau Man.

From the Boston Courier.

The champion mean man has been found again, this time in a dry goods store. A peculiarly gross counterfeit half dollar having turned up at the counting room, this clerk, P. by name, purchased it for ten cents, clerk, P. by name, purchased it for ten cents, " for a pocket piece," he said. A few days siterward the young lady to whom he was engaged came to the store and purchased nome goods, teing waited upon by P., who took her money to the desk and returned with the change. The young lady departed, but half an hour after, while P. was at dinner, she returned. She had been given, she said, a bad half dol-lar in change, and she produced the counter-had exchanged it for a good half dollar while bringing her money from the desk !

Not the Bissextille Period.

From the Marietta Times.

A young lady in town fell desperately in love with a young man, who is not noted for industry. The other day she declared to him that abe loved him so much that abe would be willing to live on bread and water if need be, in order that they might be made one flesh. The young man cooly replied, "Yes, my dear; then suppose you furnish the bread and I will furnish the water."
