many persons who are idictic or but little removed from the mental condition of idicts, certain powers of the mind may be developed to an extraordinary degree.

Remarkable presceity in the power of arithmetical calculations is frequently combined, with a positive deficiency in other directions. In institutions devoted to the care of feeble-minded children such examples are nearly always present. Deficient in come fesulties, others are developed to excess. Some such can carve and draw with great skill. Extraordinary memory is often met with associated with very great defect of reasoning. One boy, in reading Gibbon's 'Rise and Fall of the Roman Empire,'' alipped a line on the third page at his first persent. Ever after, when recting from memory the stated periods of Gibbon's would, on conting to the third page, saip the line and retrace his steps, just as when he direct recommitted the passage to memory.

Often the memory takes the form of remembering dates and past events. One boy never failed to tell correctly the name and address of every confectioner's shop in London, and could as readily tell the date of every visit. The faculty of number is usually slightly developed in faeble-minded children, while memory is fairly well developed; yet occasional faculty. Memory of tune is a very common faculty among the feeble-minded; they readily acquire simple airs and rarely forget them.

In none of the cases of idiot savants has there been any history of the possession of a similar faculty by the parents or sisters or brothers. In one case a nacropsy is reported by Dr. J. L. Down, of London. The boy had a remarkable, indeed periect, appreciation of past or passing time. There was no difference from an ordinary brain, with the exception that there were two well-marked and distinct soit commissures. Dr. Down's explanation of the phenomena was that, as every movement of the house was absolutely punctual, he had data from which he could estimate the time by actual appreciation of its flux.

Every form of mental deviation m

Every form of mental deviation may be Every form of mental deviation may be met with in the congenital feeble-minded. They may become the subjects of acute and chronic mania, of acute and chronic melancholia, and of dementia. Occasionally under the influence of acute mania, the feeble intellect of the youth becomes fanned into a brighter flame. The taciturn may become iquatious; the timid and respectful proud and defiant; the amiable and tractable, abusive and destructive. Three remarkable instances occurred to Dr. Down of boys who had never been able to speak making use of had never been able to speak making use of well-formed sentences during the high feb-rile state of acute pneumonis or scarlatina. It is of much interest to report all such cases, as they they throw great light on the workings of the human mind in health.

Persons who leave their homes to-morrow forning to see the circus parade should be careful to see that their houses are securely locked. There will be a large crowd of peopie, including many strangers, in the city, and such gatherings sometimes attract thieves who are very hard workers in their peculiar

How Mach Should Mothers Become Doctors How Much Should Mothers Become Dectors. The cld adage, "Every man to his trade," has a sharp value and something of the Anglo-Saxon ring. But in the sub-division of labor incident to civilization, every mother necessarily becomes a nurse. BARNUM TO-MORROW.

The Great Show to Spread Its Large Tents in McGrann's Park. Bright and early to-morrow morning Barnum's great show will arrive in Lancaster, and if the weather is fine one of the largest crowds that ever visited a circus here will be in attendance. The street parade will be made at an early hour, and people would do well to watch for it. The show is a great one and will undoubtedly give satisfaction. Among the features are three rings, with three full circus companies; a Roman hippodrome, with stirring races, perform ances of a starting character on a big elevated stage, living curiosities and wooders in the museum, hundreds of wild and strange animals in the two double menageries, a herd of big ele-phants in the pavilion, droves of camels, 500 phants in the pavilion, droves of camels, 500 horses, 125 ponies, 50 railroad cars, 500 performers, 100 acts, the wonderful hairy family from Surmab, King Theebaw's sacred mascots; Captain Paul Boyton in his marvellous aquatic performances in a specially constructed lake of crystal water; the flying gymnasium, wherein Senor Myers performs daring feats on the trapeze while traveling at the rate of 30 miles an hour; the reproduction of Jumbo, the huge ivory-boned elephant akeleton; Alice, Jumbo's wdow; the troupe of Arabs, clown elephant, trained pigs, monkejs, elephants, and other animals, the biggest tents ever seen, and myriads of other rare and costly objects.
