

JAMES P. BOWER FOR AUDITOR.

HIS NOMINATION DEBATED ON THE BOARD OF ALLOT.

A Resolution Resolving President Cleveland's Administration Unanimously Adopted—Provision Made to Fill Vacancies on the Ticket—Sketches of Labor and Power.

When the INTELLIGENCER went to press on Wednesday afternoon, the Democratic county convention was preparing to ballot for county officers. The first ballot resulted as follows: James P. Bower 20, E. Schaeffer 10, J. P. Montgomery 10, Daniel Smith, Jr., 9, Chas. W. Pusey 11, J. W. Kelly 10. There being no choice, a second ballot was ordered and the following was the result: Bower 30, Metzger 2, Smith 7, Pusey 3, Kelly 10. Mr. Bower having received a majority of the votes cast, he was declared the nominee.

A motion was made and adopted that a committee of five on assessment of candidates be appointed. The chair appointed as the committee, D. F. Magee, Wm. B. Givens, Wm. A. Schouberger, John J. Atteck and J. D. Harrar.

Mr. Givens offered the following resolution, which was enthusiastically received and unanimously adopted: Resolved, That the course of Grover Cleveland as president of these United States meets with our full approval, that it has been a most successful administration, and that the policy conducted to the best interests of the country, and has done much to strengthen the Democratic party.

A motion was adopted that the county committee fill all vacancies on the ticket, after which the county convention of 1887 adjourned sine die.

The Commissioner. Jacob W. Lober, the nominee for county commissioner, comes from a family that distinguished itself in Revolutionary war. His great grandfather was a Col. Wright, who took an active part in that struggle. The subject of this sketch was born in Upper Leacock township forty-seven years ago.

When he was fourteen years old his parents removed to Ephrata township, where he has since resided. He has been an active worker in the cause of Democracy since he cast his first vote. Sixteen years ago he was elected a member of the county committee, and he was re-elected year after year, with one exception.

He was a member of the Executive committee of the county for the ensuing year. He is a good organizer, and at every election could be seen at the polls hard at work, notwithstanding the great odds against him in his township.

James P. Bower, the nominee for auditor, has been a 100-year-old resident of Paradise township, where he was born fifty years ago. He is a farmer by occupation and lives on the old Eckert farm. He is also a dealer in horses and has had numerous public sales of horses in the Eastern end. He is regarded by his neighbors as an intelligent, conscientious man, and their judgment will make an efficient officer. He also is married.

Under the law Lancaster county is entitled to three commissioners and three auditors, but each voter can only cast his ballot for two candidates. This being a strong Republican county, the Democracy get only one of each of these offices, and the candidates nominated for those positions are practically elected.

Under the law Lancaster county is entitled to three commissioners and three auditors, but each voter can only cast his ballot for two candidates. This being a strong Republican county, the Democracy get only one of each of these offices, and the candidates nominated for those positions are practically elected.

Under the law Lancaster county is entitled to three commissioners and three auditors, but each voter can only cast his ballot for two candidates. This being a strong Republican county, the Democracy get only one of each of these offices, and the candidates nominated for those positions are practically elected.

Under the law Lancaster county is entitled to three commissioners and three auditors, but each voter can only cast his ballot for two candidates. This being a strong Republican county, the Democracy get only one of each of these offices, and the candidates nominated for those positions are practically elected.

Under the law Lancaster county is entitled to three commissioners and three auditors, but each voter can only cast his ballot for two candidates. This being a strong Republican county, the Democracy get only one of each of these offices, and the candidates nominated for those positions are practically elected.

Under the law Lancaster county is entitled to three commissioners and three auditors, but each voter can only cast his ballot for two candidates. This being a strong Republican county, the Democracy get only one of each of these offices, and the candidates nominated for those positions are practically elected.

Under the law Lancaster county is entitled to three commissioners and three auditors, but each voter can only cast his ballot for two candidates. This being a strong Republican county, the Democracy get only one of each of these offices, and the candidates nominated for those positions are practically elected.

Under the law Lancaster county is entitled to three commissioners and three auditors, but each voter can only cast his ballot for two candidates. This being a strong Republican county, the Democracy get only one of each of these offices, and the candidates nominated for those positions are practically elected.

HE LEFT WIFE AND WEALTH.

A SON OF JUDAS WIFE OF INDIANAPOLIS. UPL. JOURNALIST DISAPPEARS.

He was a charming family and was the heir to a fortune, but he was a miser and a miser's wife is a miser's enemy.

Not long since in Indianapolis are gossiping over the alleged elopement of a popular and wealthy young man with a comely miss of eighteen summers. Fischer Hines is one of the parties. He is the only son of Judge C. G. Hines, late of the Indiana Supreme Court. He is well to do and is heir to an estate of more than half a million. He was reared there and sent to Harvard college, where he was graduated when yet in his teens.

Eight years ago, at the age of twenty-six, he married an estimable young lady belonging to an excellent family in New York state and they made their home on a farm near Indianapolis, where he was a successful farmer.

On Monday evening last he had a casual good-bye to Mrs. Hines and his children, saying he intended to drive over to see the Hartsell family. He did not return that night as he had intended to do, and his wife was not at first disturbed by his absence, thinking he had driven to the city, but on Monday evening, when no message came from him, and when the children began to reach her, she telegraphed Judge Hines, who is now in Vermont, asking him to inquire for her.

For the government of their own affairs, the Hines family has been forbidden their agents to receive commission from other companies, and to sell tickets over roads of companies that refuse to recognize the corporate authority, but insist on subsidizing the agents. In these directions the Hines family have not transgressed their reasonable rights. One person or corporation has no right to interfere with the rights of another, and the Hines family do not disturb this old and sound principle.

From the Hartsell family. A very young resident happened to Chas. Hoppie Wednesday about 10 o'clock. The circumstances of the affair have not as yet been explained, as he has not recovered consciousness since. A caller of the Pennsylvania railroad while in search of an employee in the vicinity of May street noticed something in the window of a locked room, and upon investigation it was found to be Mr. Hoppie. Assistance was summoned, and the man was taken to a hospital in comfortable circumstances, where he now lies in a critical condition. Medical aid was called, and it was found that he sustained a fracture of the skull, and a laceration of the brain, which may yet prove fatal. No person knew definitely how the accident occurred, but it was believed that he fell out of a window while asleep. The part of the house remained unnoticed until he was discovered by the caller. Mr. Hoppie is a young man, and is a member of the Pennsylvania railroad, and is generally liked, and his many friends wish him a speedy recovery.

The Latest News. The League of Nations was held at Philadelphia-Philadelphia 9, Pittsburg 2; at New York-New York 4, Pittsburg 2; at Boston-Boston 6, Chicago 7; at Washington-Washington 3, Chicago 7. The St. Louis baseball team won the St. Louis baseball game by a score of 10 to 6 at Philadelphia. The other games were: at Philadelphia-Philadelphia 9, Pittsburg 2; at Baltimore-Baltimore 6, Cleveland 7; at Brooklyn-Brooklyn 11, Louisville 7.

Wickett continues to win in the International baseball game, defeating the team of Hamilton by 6 to 1. The Syracuse were beaten by Syracuse by 12 to 1. The Bradford and Altoona clubs played a game at Altoona, which was a very close one, but the Bradford team won by a score of 10 to 6. The Altoona team was defeated by the Bradford team by a score of 10 to 6.

Eight thousand people saw yesterday's Chicago-Gosport game. The game was a very close one, but the Chicago team won by a score of 10 to 6. The Gosport team was defeated by the Chicago team by a score of 10 to 6.

At Pen Mar, Md., a union of Methodists began Wednesday when about 500 persons participated in the exercises. New York, New Jersey, Pennsylvania, Virginia, West Virginia, Maryland and the District of Columbia are represented. Right Rev. Bishop Doane presided, and Rev. Dr. J. A. McCreary, president of Dickinson college, spoke on the work of that institution and Rev. G. E. Elliott, president of the National Education Association, spoke on the work of that organization. It is proposed to meet annually there.

Fire Storms. One of the most disastrous storms ever known in West Virginia swept over the counties of Wirt and Wood about dusk Tuesday night, doing damage which will amount to a large sum, besides wounding a large number of persons. The storm was accompanied by a heavy rain, and the wind was from the west. The damage done was estimated at $100,000.

Iron Workers Locked Out at Reading. On Wednesday the iron workers at Reading were locked out of their work by the mill owners. The workers had been on strike for some time, and the mill owners had refused to negotiate with them. The workers are now without work, and are suffering from lack of food and shelter.

A Young Schoolboy's Awful Death. John Donahue, a prominent young Democrat politician, met a terrible death in the mines at Taylor's colliery, Ashland, on Wednesday. About twenty tons of coal fell upon him, and he was killed instantly. His body was recovered from the trunk and the body cut in two. Donahue was leader of the choir in St. Ignace's church, and had attained considerable prominence as a musical director.

Head-Hunter on Route to Africa. Head-Hunter, of Brookfield, Conn., and a constant reader of Light literature, left his home Wednesday morning with the intention of going to Africa. He took with him an old-fashioned horse pistol. While he was on the coast of Africa, he was shot by a native and killed. His body was recovered from the trunk and the body cut in two. Donahue was leader of the choir in St. Ignace's church, and had attained considerable prominence as a musical director.

Damage Awarded Against Railroad. Mary A. Turbett, the widowed mother of Brakeman Robert Turbett, who, with Conductors Baldwin and McCahan, was killed at the Dunannon bridge disaster in January, 1886, was on Wednesday in Huntingdon, awarded $2,500 damages against the Pennsylvania railroad company. Mrs. Turbett had previously received $400 gratuity from the company. This being a test case as to the liability of the company, similar suits will be instituted by the widows of the other two victims.

Complaint Withdrawn. The assault and battery case against Henry J. Kegel, preferred by his wife, was heard by Alderman Barr last evening. At the conclusion of the testimony the husband and wife agreed on a separation, the complaint was withdrawn and case paid.

125 Cows Poisoned. It is reported that 125 of the New York Third Avenue Car company's horses have been poisoned by cyanide of potassium, in consequence of which the company's business has been paralyzed, and several more are unable to work. The officers of the Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Animals have been notified, and are endeavoring to show that the poisoning was intentional.

Bill Imposing a Tax of $10,000 on Wine. A bill imposing a tax of $10,000 on wine was introduced in the Pennsylvania legislature. The bill was introduced by a member of the Pennsylvania legislature, and is intended to raise revenue for the state.

AN AWFUL DISASTER.

THIRTY OR FORTY RAILROAD LABORERS KILLED BY FIRE.

An Express on the Erie Road Dashed Around a Curve and Struck a Gang of Italian, The Tracks Covered by Blood, Broken Bones and Fish.

New York, July 21.—A frightful railroad accident occurred this morning on the Erie railroad between Allentown and Hoboken. A gang of Italian laborers were at work ballasting on the railroad a little distance from a sharp curve in the road about three-quarters of a mile above Hoboken. The Chicago express, which was due an hour before, had not arrived, and these men were busy at work unconscious of the terrible fate which was in store for them.

At a quarter past seven o'clock train No. 12, the express which was due an hour before, dashed round the curve before the men had the slightest warning and struck the gang of men, killing twelve or fifteen on the spot and wounding many more. The shrieks of the victims were heartrending, and when the train slowed up the track presented a sickening sight, being covered with mangled bodies, the rails being sweltered with blood and strewn with broken bones and pieces of ragged flesh. Some of the bodies were mangled beyond description and crushed out of semblance of humanity.

To most of the victims death must have been instantaneous, but some of them seemed to have lingered for a few moments before death when the train was brought to a standstill. The train waited about fifteen minutes and then proceeded on its way.

Mr. W. L. Hudson, a passenger on a local train following the express, said to a United States reporter that the scene at the place of the accident was the most sickening he ever saw. "All along the track," continued Mr. Hudson, "are strewn arms, legs, trunks and other parts of bodies and the track for a long distance is slippery with blood. The train must have dashed into the midst of the men sleeping and at the same time the conductor of the train upon which I rode said that the train hands of the express were not to blame and said the foreman of the gang should have been on the lookout and warned the men of the approach of the train. None of the names of the victims could be ascertained."

Some Game Regulators Making It Warm for Brigham Young's Disciples. The Mormon missionaries who have been preaching in the Wrightsboro district, Georgia, and who have succeeded in converting a large number of ignorant people to their religion, have given rise to the people who have opposed them in that section, and in fact the whole country is in a fever. Many attempts have been made to rid the country of them, but without avail, and last night a band of about twenty men from Augusta and the Wrightsboro district formed and drove them out of the district. The plan of the regulators was to surround the missionaries and their families, and then to burn their dwellings, threatening them with death if they returned to Georgia. The missionaries were proceeding to the house of J. L. Farmer, ten miles from the city, where the Mormons had been staying, but upon arriving they found the house of the Mormons had been burned, and the missionaries were informed by the occupants of the house that the Mormons had only left for a day or two in order to prevent their houses from being burned. The regulators returned they would be supported by a large number of people than before, who would see that they were not allowed to return to the country. The regulators searched diligently for the missionaries, and they were found in the house of J. L. Farmer, ten miles from the city, where the Mormons had been staying, but upon arriving they found the house of the Mormons had been burned, and the missionaries were informed by the occupants of the house that the Mormons had only left for a day or two in order to prevent their houses from being burned. The regulators returned they would be supported by a large number of people than before, who would see that they were not allowed to return to the country. The regulators searched diligently for the missionaries, and they were found in the house of J. L. Farmer, ten miles from the city, where the Mormons had been staying, but upon arriving they found the house of the Mormons had been burned, and the missionaries were informed by the occupants of the house that the Mormons had only left for a day or two in order to prevent their houses from being burned. The regulators returned they would be supported by a large number of people than before, who would see that they were not allowed to return to the country. The regulators searched diligently for the missionaries, and they were found in the house of J. L. Farmer, ten miles from the city, where the Mormons had been staying, but upon arriving they found the house of the Mormons had been burned, and the missionaries were informed by the occupants of the house that the Mormons had only left for a day or two in order to prevent their houses from being burned. The regulators returned they would be supported by a large number of people than before, who would see that they were not allowed to return to the country. The regulators searched diligently for the missionaries, and they were found in the house of J. L. Farmer, ten miles from the city, where the Mormons had been staying, but upon arriving they found the house of the Mormons had been burned, and the missionaries were informed by the occupants of the house that the Mormons had only left for a day or two in order to prevent their houses from being burned. The regulators returned they would be supported by a large number of people than before, who would see that they were not allowed to return to the country. The regulators searched diligently for the missionaries, and they were found in the house of J. L. Farmer, ten miles from the city, where the Mormons had been staying, but upon arriving they found the house of the Mormons had been burned, and the missionaries were informed by the occupants of the house that the Mormons had only left for a day or two in order to prevent their houses from being burned. The regulators returned they would be supported by a large number of people than before, who would see that they were not allowed to return to the country. The regulators searched diligently for the missionaries, and they were found in the house of J. L. Farmer, ten miles from the city, where the Mormons had been staying, but upon arriving they found the house of the Mormons had been burned, and the missionaries were informed by the occupants of the house that the Mormons had only left for a day or two in order to prevent their houses from being burned. The regulators returned they would be supported by a large number of people than before, who would see that they were not allowed to return to the country. The regulators searched diligently for the missionaries, and they were found in the house of J. L. Farmer, ten miles from the city, where the Mormons had been staying, but upon arriving they found the house of the Mormons had been burned, and the missionaries were informed by the occupants of the house that the Mormons had only left for a day or two in order to prevent their houses from being burned. The regulators returned they would be supported by a large number of people than before, who would see that they were not allowed to return to the country. The regulators searched diligently for the missionaries, and they were found in the house of J. L. Farmer, ten miles from the city, where the Mormons had been staying, but upon arriving they found the house of the Mormons had been burned, and the missionaries were informed by the occupants of the house that the Mormons had only left for a day or two in order to prevent their houses from being burned. The regulators returned they would be supported by a large number of people than before, who would see that they were not allowed to return to the country. The regulators searched diligently for the missionaries, and they were found in the house of J. L. Farmer, ten miles from the city, where the Mormons had been staying, but upon arriving they found the house of the Mormons had been burned, and the missionaries were informed by the occupants of the house that the Mormons had only left for a day or two in order to prevent their houses from being burned. The regulators returned they would be supported by a large number of people than before, who would see that they were not allowed to return to the country. The regulators searched diligently for the missionaries, and they were found in the house of J. L. Farmer, ten miles from the city, where the Mormons had been staying, but upon arriving they found the house of the Mormons had been burned, and the missionaries were informed by the occupants of the house that the Mormons had only left for a day or two in order to prevent their houses from being burned. The regulators returned they would be supported by a large number of people than before, who would see that they were not allowed to return to the country. The regulators searched diligently for the missionaries, and they were found in the house of J. L. Farmer, ten miles from the city, where the Mormons had been staying, but upon arriving they found the house of the Mormons had been burned, and the missionaries were informed by the occupants of the house that the Mormons had only left for a day or two in order to prevent their houses from being burned. The regulators returned they would be supported by a large number of people than before, who would see that they were not allowed to return to the country. The regulators searched diligently for the missionaries, and they were found in the house of J. L. Farmer, ten miles from the city, where the Mormons had been staying, but upon arriving they found the house of the Mormons had been burned, and the missionaries were informed by the occupants of the house that the Mormons had only left for a day or two in order to prevent their houses from being burned. The regulators returned they would be supported by a large number of people than before, who would see that they were not allowed to return to the country. The regulators searched diligently for the missionaries, and they were found in the house of J. L. Farmer, ten miles from the city, where the Mormons had been staying, but upon arriving they found the house of the Mormons had been burned, and the missionaries were informed by the occupants of the house that the Mormons had only left for a day or two in order to prevent their houses from being burned. The regulators returned they would be supported by a large number of people than before, who would see that they were not allowed to return to the country. The regulators searched diligently for the missionaries, and they were found in the house of J. L. Farmer, ten miles from the city, where the Mormons had been staying, but upon arriving they found the house of the Mormons had been burned, and the missionaries were informed by the occupants of the house that the Mormons had only left for a day or two in order to prevent their houses from being burned. The regulators returned they would be supported by a large number of people than before, who would see that they were not allowed to return to the country. The regulators searched diligently for the missionaries, and they were found in the house of J. L. Farmer, ten miles from the city, where the Mormons had been staying, but upon arriving they found the house of the Mormons had been burned, and the missionaries were informed by the occupants of the house that the Mormons had only left for a day or two in order to prevent their houses from being burned. The regulators returned they would be supported by a large number of people than before, who would see that they were not allowed to return to the country. The regulators searched diligently for the missionaries, and they were found in the house of J. L. Farmer, ten miles from the city, where the Mormons had been staying, but upon arriving they found the house of the Mormons had been burned, and the missionaries were informed by the occupants of the house that the Mormons had only left for a day or two in order to prevent their houses from being burned. The regulators returned they would be supported by a large number of people than before, who would see that they were not allowed to return to the country. The regulators searched diligently for the missionaries, and they were found in the house of J. L. Farmer, ten miles from the city, where the Mormons had been staying, but upon arriving they found the house of the Mormons had been burned, and the missionaries were informed by the occupants of the house that the Mormons had only left for a day or two in order to prevent their houses from being burned. The regulators returned they would be supported by a large number of people than before, who would see that they were not allowed to return to the country. The regulators searched diligently for the missionaries, and they were found in the house of J. L. Farmer, ten miles from the city, where the Mormons had been staying, but upon arriving they found the house of the Mormons had been burned, and the missionaries were informed by the occupants of the house that the Mormons had only left for a day or two in order to prevent their houses from being burned. The regulators returned they would be supported by a large number of people than before, who would see that they were not allowed to return to the country. The regulators searched diligently for the missionaries, and they were found in the house of J. L. Farmer, ten miles from the city, where the Mormons had been staying, but upon arriving they found the house of the Mormons had been burned, and the missionaries were informed by the occupants of the house that the Mormons had only left for a day or two in order to prevent their houses from being burned. The regulators returned they would be supported by a large number of people than before, who would see that they were not allowed to return to the country. The regulators searched diligently for the missionaries, and they were found in the house of J. L. Farmer, ten miles from the city, where the Mormons had been staying, but upon arriving they found the house of the Mormons had been burned, and the missionaries were informed by the occupants of the house that the Mormons had only left for a day or two in order to prevent their houses from being burned. The regulators returned they would be supported by a large number of people than before, who would see that they were not allowed to return to the country. The regulators searched diligently for the missionaries, and they were found in the house of J. L. Farmer, ten miles from the city, where the Mormons had been staying, but upon arriving they found the house of the Mormons had been burned, and the missionaries were informed by the occupants of the house that the Mormons had only left for a day or two in order to prevent their houses from being burned. The regulators returned they would be supported by a large number of people than before, who would see that they were not allowed to return to the country. The regulators searched diligently for the missionaries, and they were found in the house of J. L. Farmer, ten miles from the city, where the Mormons had been staying, but upon arriving they found the house of the Mormons had been burned, and the missionaries were informed by the occupants of the house that the Mormons had only left for a day or two in order to prevent their houses from being burned. The regulators returned they would be supported by a large number of people than before, who would see that they were not allowed to return to the country. The regulators searched diligently for the missionaries, and they were found in the house of J. L. Farmer, ten miles from the city, where the Mormons had been staying, but upon arriving they found the house of the Mormons had been burned, and the missionaries were informed by the occupants of the house that the Mormons had only left for a day or two in order to prevent their houses from being burned. The regulators returned they would be supported by a large number of people than before, who would see that they were not allowed to return to the country. The regulators searched diligently for the missionaries, and they were found in the house of J. L. Farmer, ten miles from the city, where the Mormons had been staying, but upon arriving they found the house of the Mormons had been burned, and the missionaries were informed by the occupants of the house that the Mormons had only left for a day or two in order to prevent their houses from being burned. The regulators returned they would be supported by a large number of people than before, who would see that they were not allowed to return to the country. The regulators searched diligently for the missionaries, and they were found in the house of J. L. Farmer, ten miles from the city, where the Mormons had been staying, but upon arriving they found the house of the Mormons had been burned, and the missionaries were informed by the occupants of the house that the Mormons had only left for a day or two in order to prevent their houses from being burned. The regulators returned they would be supported by a large number of people than before, who would see that they were not allowed to return to the country. The regulators searched diligently for the missionaries, and they were found in the house of J. L. Farmer, ten miles from the city, where the Mormons had been staying, but upon arriving they found the house of the Mormons had been burned, and the missionaries were informed by the occupants of the house that the Mormons had only left for a day or two in order to prevent their houses from being burned. The regulators returned they would be supported by a large number of people than before, who would see that they were not allowed to return to the country. The regulators searched diligently for the missionaries, and they were found in the house of J. L. Farmer, ten miles from the city, where the Mormons had been staying, but upon arriving they found the house of the Mormons had been burned, and the missionaries were informed by the occupants of the house that the Mormons had only left for a day or two in order to prevent their houses from being burned. The regulators returned they would be supported by a large number of people than before, who would see that they were not allowed to return to the country. The regulators searched diligently for the missionaries, and they were found in the house of J. L. Farmer, ten miles from the city, where the Mormons had been staying, but upon arriving they found the house of the Mormons had been burned, and the missionaries were informed by the occupants of the house that the Mormons had only left for a day or two in order to prevent their houses from being burned. The regulators returned they would be supported by a large number of people than before, who would see that they were not allowed to return to the country. The regulators searched diligently for the missionaries, and they were found in the house of J. L. Farmer, ten miles from the city, where the Mormons had been staying, but upon arriving they found the house of the Mormons had been burned, and the missionaries were informed by the occupants of the house that the Mormons had only left for a day or two in order to prevent their houses from being burned. The regulators returned they would be supported by a large number of people than before, who would see that they were not allowed to return to the country. The regulators searched diligently for the missionaries, and they were found in the house of J. L. Farmer, ten miles from the city, where the Mormons had been staying, but upon arriving they found the house of the Mormons had been burned, and the missionaries were informed by the occupants of the house that the Mormons had only left for a day or two in order to prevent their houses from being burned. The regulators returned they would be supported by a large number of people than before, who would see that they were not allowed to return to the country. The regulators searched diligently for the missionaries, and they were found in the house of J. L. Farmer, ten miles from the city, where the Mormons had been staying, but upon arriving they found the house of the Mormons had been burned, and the missionaries were informed by the occupants of the house that the Mormons had only left for a day or two in order to prevent their houses from being burned. The regulators returned they would be supported by a large number of people than before, who would see that they were not allowed to return to the country. The regulators searched diligently for the missionaries, and they were found in the house of J. L. Farmer, ten miles from the city, where the Mormons had been staying, but upon arriving they found the house of the Mormons had been burned, and the missionaries were informed by the occupants of the house that the Mormons had only left for a day or two in order to prevent their houses from being burned. The regulators returned they would be supported by a large number of people than before, who would see that they were not allowed to return to the country. The regulators searched diligently for the missionaries, and they were found in the house of J. L. Farmer, ten miles from the city, where the Mormons had been staying, but upon arriving they found the house of the Mormons had been burned, and the missionaries were informed by the occupants of the house that the Mormons had only left for a day or two in order to prevent their houses from being burned. The regulators returned they would be supported by a large number of people than before, who would see that they were not allowed to return to the country. The regulators searched diligently for the missionaries, and they were found in the house of J. L. Farmer, ten miles from the city, where the Mormons had been staying, but upon arriving they found the house of the Mormons had been burned, and the missionaries were informed by the occupants of the house that the Mormons had only left for a day or two in order to prevent their houses from being burned. The regulators returned they would be supported by a large number of people than before, who would see that they were not allowed to return to the country. The regulators searched diligently for the missionaries, and they were found in the house of J. L. Farmer, ten miles from the city, where the Mormons had been staying, but upon arriving they found the house of the Mormons had been burned, and the missionaries were informed by the occupants of the house that the Mormons had only left for a day or two in order to prevent their houses from being burned. The regulators returned they would be supported by a large number of people than before, who would see that they were not allowed to return to the country. The regulators searched diligently for the missionaries, and they were found in the house of J. L. Farmer, ten miles from the city, where the Mormons had been staying, but upon arriving they found the house of the Mormons had been burned, and the missionaries were informed by the occupants of the house that the Mormons had only left for a day or two in order to prevent their houses from being burned. The regulators returned they would be supported by a large number of people than before, who would see that they were not allowed to return to the country. The regulators searched diligently for the missionaries, and they were found in the house of J. L. Farmer, ten miles from the city, where the Mormons had been staying, but upon arriving they found the house of the Mormons had been burned, and the missionaries were informed by the occupants of the house that the Mormons had only left for a day or two in order to prevent their houses from being burned. The regulators returned they would be supported by a large number of people than before, who would see that they were not allowed to return to the country. The regulators searched diligently for the missionaries, and they were found in the house of J. L. Farmer, ten miles from the city, where the Mormons had been staying, but upon arriving they found the house of the Mormons had been burned, and the missionaries were informed by the occupants of the house that the Mormons had only left for a day or two in order to prevent their houses from being burned. The regulators returned they would be supported by a large number of people than before, who would see that they were not allowed to return to the country. The regulators searched diligently for the missionaries, and they were found in the house of J. L. Farmer, ten miles from the city, where the Mormons had been staying, but upon arriving they found the house of the Mormons had been burned, and the missionaries were informed by the occupants of the house that the Mormons had only left for a day or two in order to prevent their houses from being burned. The regulators returned they would be supported by a large number of people than before, who would see that they were not allowed to return to the country. The regulators searched diligently for the missionaries, and they were found in the house of J. L. Farmer, ten miles from the city, where the Mormons had been staying, but upon arriving they found the house of the Mormons had been burned, and the missionaries were informed by the occupants of the house that the Mormons had only left for a day or two in order to prevent their houses from being burned. The regulators returned they would be supported by a large number of people than before, who would see that they were not allowed to return to the country. The regulators searched diligently for the missionaries, and they were found in the house of J. L. Farmer, ten miles from the city, where the Mormons had been staying, but upon arriving they found the house of the Mormons had been burned, and the missionaries were informed by the occupants of the house that the Mormons had only left for a day or two in order to prevent their houses from being burned. The regulators returned they would be supported by a large number of people than before, who would see that they were not allowed to return to the country. The regulators searched diligently for the missionaries, and they were found in the house of J. L. Farmer, ten miles from the city, where the Mormons had been staying, but upon arriving they found the house of the Mormons had been burned, and the missionaries were informed by the occupants of the house that the Mormons had only left for a day or two in order to prevent their houses from being burned. The regulators returned they would be supported by a large number of people than before, who would see that they were not allowed to return to the country. The regulators searched diligently for the missionaries, and they were found in the house of J. L. Farmer, ten miles from the city, where the Mormons had been staying, but upon arriving they found the house of the Mormons had been burned, and the missionaries were informed by the occupants of the house that the Mormons had only left for a day or two in order to prevent their houses from being burned. The regulators returned they would be supported by a large number of people than before, who would see that they were not allowed to return to the country. The regulators searched diligently for the missionaries, and they were found in the house of J. L. Farmer, ten miles from the city, where the Mormons had been staying, but upon arriving they found the house of the Mormons had been burned, and the missionaries were informed by the occupants of the house that the Mormons had only left for a day or two in order to prevent their houses from being burned. The regulators returned they would be supported by a large number of people than before, who would see that they were not allowed to return to the country. The regulators searched diligently for the missionaries, and they were found in the house of J. L. Farmer, ten miles from the city, where the Mormons had been staying, but upon arriving they found the house of the Mormons had been burned, and the missionaries were informed by the occupants of the house that the Mormons had only left for a day or two in order to prevent their houses from being burned. The regulators returned they would be supported by a large number of people than before, who would see that they were not allowed to return to the country. The regulators searched diligently for the missionaries, and they were found in the house of J. L. Farmer, ten miles from the city, where the Mormons had been staying, but upon arriving they found the house of the Mormons had been burned, and the missionaries were informed by the occupants of the house that the Mormons had only left for a day or two in order to prevent their houses from being burned. The regulators returned they would be supported by a large number of people than before, who would see that they were not allowed to return to the country. The regulators searched diligently for the missionaries, and they were found in the house of J. L. Farmer, ten miles from the city, where the Mormons had been staying, but upon arriving they found the house of the Mormons had been burned, and the missionaries were informed by the occupants of the house that the Mormons had only left for a day or two in order to prevent their houses from being burned. The regulators returned they would be supported by a large number of people than before, who would see that they were not allowed to return to the country. The regulators searched diligently for the missionaries, and they were found in the house of J. L. Farmer, ten miles from the city, where the Mormons had been staying, but upon arriving they found the house of the Mormons had been burned, and the missionaries were informed by the occupants of the house that the Mormons had only left for a day or two in order to prevent their houses from being burned. The regulators returned they would be supported by a large number of people than before, who would see that they were not allowed to return to the country. The regulators searched diligently for the missionaries, and they were found in the house of J. L. Farmer, ten miles from the city, where the Mormons had been staying, but upon arriving they found the house of the Mormons had been burned, and the missionaries were informed by the occupants of the house that the Mormons had only left for a day or two in order to prevent their houses from being burned. The regulators returned they would be supported by a large number of people than before, who would see that they were not allowed to return to the country. The regulators searched diligently for the missionaries, and they were found in the house of J. L. Farmer, ten miles from the city, where the Mormons had been staying, but upon arriving they found the house of the Mormons had been burned, and the missionaries were informed by the occupants of the house that the Mormons had only left for a day or two in order to prevent their houses from being burned. The regulators returned they would be supported by a large number of people than before, who would see that they were not allowed to return to the country. The regulators searched diligently for the missionaries, and they were found in the house of J. L. Farmer, ten miles from the city, where the Mormons had been staying, but upon arriving they found the house of the Mormons had been burned, and the missionaries were informed by the occupants of the house that the Mormons had only left for a day or two in order to prevent their houses from being burned. The regulators returned they would be supported by a large number of people than before, who would see that they were not allowed to return to the country. The regulators searched diligently for the missionaries, and they were found in the house of J. L. Farmer, ten miles from the city, where the Mormons had been staying, but upon arriving they found the house of the Mormons had been burned, and the missionaries were informed by the occupants of the house that the Mormons had only left for a day or two in order to prevent their houses from being burned. The regulators returned they would be supported by a large number of people than before, who would see that they were not allowed to return to the country. The regulators searched diligently for the missionaries, and they were found in the house of J. L. Farmer, ten miles from the city, where the Mormons had been staying, but upon arriving they found the house of the Mormons had been burned, and the missionaries were informed by the occupants of the house that the Mormons had only left for a day or two in order to prevent their houses from being burned. The regulators returned they would be supported by a large number of people than before, who would see that they were not allowed to return to the country. The regulators searched diligently for the missionaries, and they were found in the house of J. L. Farmer, ten miles from the city, where the Mormons had been staying, but upon arriving they found the house of the Mormons had been burned, and the missionaries were informed by the occupants of the house that the Mormons had only left for a day or two in order to prevent their houses from being burned. The regulators returned they would be supported by a large number of people than before, who would see that they were not allowed to return to the country. The regulators searched diligently for the missionaries, and they were found in the house of J. L. Farmer, ten miles from the city, where the Mormons had been staying, but upon arriving they found the house of the Mormons had been burned, and the missionaries were informed by the occupants of the house that the Mormons had only left for a day or two in order to prevent their houses from being burned. The regulators returned they would be supported by a large number of people than before, who would see that they were not allowed to return to the country. The regulators searched diligently for the missionaries, and they were found in the house of J. L. Farmer, ten miles from the city, where the Mormons had been staying, but upon arriving they found the house of the Mormons had been burned, and the missionaries were informed by the occupants of the house that the Mormons had only left for a day or two in order to prevent their houses from being burned. The regulators returned they would be supported by a large number of people than before, who would see that they were not allowed to return to the country. The regulators searched diligently for the missionaries, and they were found in the house of J. L. Farmer, ten miles from the city, where the Mormons had been staying, but upon arriving they found the house of the Mormons had been burned, and the missionaries were informed by the occupants of the house that the Mormons had only left for a day or two in order to prevent their houses from being burned. The regulators returned they would be supported by a large number of people than before, who would see that they were not allowed to return to the country. The regulators searched diligently for the missionaries, and they were found in the house of J. L. Farmer, ten miles from the city, where the Mormons had been staying, but upon arriving they found the house of the Mormons had been burned, and the missionaries were informed by the occupants of the house that the Mormons had only left for a day or two in order to prevent their houses from being burned. The regulators returned they would be supported by a large number of people than before, who would see that they were not allowed to return to the country. The regulators searched diligently for the missionaries, and they were found in the house of J. L. Farmer, ten miles from the city, where the Mormons had been staying, but upon arriving they found the house of the Mormons had been burned, and the missionaries were informed by the occupants of the house that the Mormons had only left for a day or two in order to prevent their houses from being burned. The regulators returned they would be supported by a large number of people than before, who would see that they were not allowed to return to the country. The regulators searched diligently for the missionaries, and they were found in the house of J. L. Farmer, ten miles from the city, where the Mormons had been staying, but upon arriving they found the house of the Mormons had been burned, and the missionaries were informed by the occupants of the house that the Mormons had only left for a day or two in order to prevent their houses from being burned. The regulators returned they would be supported by a large number of people than before, who would see that they were not allowed to return to the country. The regulators searched diligently for the missionaries, and they were found in the house of J. L. Farmer, ten miles from the city, where the Mormons had been staying, but upon arriving they found the house of the Mormons had been burned, and the missionaries were informed by the occupants of the house that the Mormons had only left for a day or two in order to prevent their houses from being burned. The regulators returned they would be supported by a large number of people than before, who would see that they were not allowed to return to the country. The regulators searched diligently for the missionaries, and they were found in the house of J. L. Farmer, ten miles from the city, where the Mormons had been staying, but upon arriving they found the house of the Mormons had been burned, and the missionaries were informed by the occupants of the house that the Mormons had only left for a day or two in order to prevent their houses from being burned. The regulators returned they would be supported by a large number of people than before, who would see that they were not allowed to return to the country. The regulators searched diligently for the missionaries, and they were found in the house of J. L. Farmer, ten miles from the city, where the Mormons had been staying, but upon arriving they found the house of the Mormons had been burned, and the missionaries were informed by the occupants of the house that the Mormons had only left for a day or two in order to prevent their houses from being burned. The regulators returned they would be supported by a large number of people than before, who would see that they were not allowed to return to the country. The regulators searched diligently for the missionaries, and they were found in the house of J. L. Farmer, ten miles from the city, where the Mormons had been staying, but upon arriving they found the house of the Mormons had been burned, and the missionaries were informed by the occupants of the house that the Mormons had only left for a day or two in order to prevent their houses from being burned. The regulators returned they would be supported by a large number of people than before, who would see that they were not allowed to return to the country. The regulators searched diligently for the missionaries, and they were found in the house of J. L. Farmer, ten miles from the city, where the Mormons had been staying, but upon arriving they found the house of the Mormons had been burned, and the missionaries were informed by the occupants of the house that the Mormons had only left for a day or two in order to prevent their houses from being burned. The regulators returned they would be supported by a large number of people than before, who would see that they were not allowed to return to the country. The regulators searched diligently for the