Interviews Had With People Who Have Lived in the Institution and Who Tell Worst Tales of Its Unpleasantness—Immersed in the Past.

While Dr. Senning, of the Lancaster county hospital, was expressing on Friday his strange preference for the small building where the air is so pure and bracing and the ventilation so perfect, while he was asserting that he personally would rather be sick in the lower than in the upper hospital, the reporter noted a strong odor of disinfectants, and thought of a pleasant room with several windows and neat white beds that he had seen in the upper hospital, and he said to himself with a mental smile: "A man who would prefer this little damp room to the one on the hill, would by that preference give good reason for his prompt transfer to the insane department."

The doctor went on to observe that it was not true that three of the men bathed in one water, as they could get all the water they wanted. But the report of the state board of charities asserts that such was the case (page 21). The reporter strayed away through the upper hospital and on up the hill to the poor house, and there he was met by a man who had been in the hospital and with whom he was still there and they all confirmed the account given by the boy (page 21). THE GRAVE-DIGGER'S TALK. William Keller, the ex-gravestone carver, corner of Christian and Middle streets, is a very old man with a very clear head. He tells the following horrible tale: Two years ago a man was lying in the hospital from the first to the sixteenth of May when the body was so far decomposed that it had to be carried away on a stretcher. He says that the man was buried in a coffin which was so tight that it was impossible to get the body out, and that he was forced to dig a hole in the wall of the cemetery to get the body out.

STORIES OF VIOLENCE. Mr. Nicholas Meisenthal was a ward nurse under Dr. McCreary and said that at that time a good many of the old fellows who came from the poor house brought vermin with them. When he went there he found plenty of vermin in a cage, and at once burnt some of the blankets and picked others. The doctor was not down every day, and when Meisenthal asked for medicine he received a short answer.

A CURIOUS ESCAPE. Two sisters to escape the parental rage are obliged to exchange lovers.

Beaten by Houghs. From the Chester County (Parkersburg) Times. A woman, evidently of unbounded mind, who claimed Lancaster as her home, got off the Parkersburg train on Wednesday night, and while wandering about the town was attacked by some of the many young ruffians who infest our street corners at night, who so excited the woman as to attract the attention of Officer Lowery, who took her to the station house and locked her up. It is not clear to the average mind why the desperate hoodlums who have no training sufficient to prevent them from annoying a dejected woman, were not locked up, also.

Curious Slavery Medal. Chas. Heiglerwald, our local numismatist, recently secured with a collection of coins purchased a curious medallic relic of the old slavery days. This medal is of oval shape, about an inch and a half in length and was the badge of freedom required by the city of Charleston, S. C., to be worn to distinguish the free negroes from those still in slavery. It is struck from a die and in the center has a liberty pole surmounted by a cap inscribed with the word "Free," surrounded by "City of Charleston." A register appears to have been kept of the wearers of these badges as this one is engraved "No. 33."

Good to Hear of. From the New Holland Clarion. The interest in the proposed Cornwall & New Holland railroad seems to be increasing from week to week.

THURMAN PRAISES CLEVELAND

His Unbounded Energy and Courage—His Manly Deeds and His Popular Character.

From the Erie Times. A report in the Register of the slot at the Lancaster county hospital induced a reporter of the INTELLIGENCER to investigate. He found only too much truth in the report. The inmates should be without proper food, exposed to the annoyance of numbers of flies and without proper bedding, is certainly a sad reflection upon the humanity of intelligent community. Trust the proper authorities will at once render these unfortunate people comfortable at any expense. Much better expend the amount of money necessary for the erection of a new jail for the purpose of caring for these unfortunate human beings and allow the old jail to receive the criminals.

AT PRINCE PARK. The serene and majestic Presbyterians Sunday school gave a delightful picnic. Despite the rainy weather of Thursday and the heavy lowering clouds that obscured the sun on Friday morning, the joint picnic of the Presbyterian memorial and Moravian Sunday schools was a grand success. The picnic was held at the upper depot, where the picnic grounds are situated, and the picnic was a grand success. THE LABORER'S HONESTY AND COURAGE. "What do you attribute his popularity to?" "The man's undoubted honesty and his undoubted courage. The American people like a brave man and an honest man. Every body must admit that Mr. Cleveland is both."

"You think that his administration has been successful?" "He has done wonderfully well and has made very few blunders. Of course he has made blunders, but considering his position, very few."

"Do you think he is stronger now than he was in 1861?" "How do I think that there is very little objection to his nomination for the presidency. He would be a hard man to beat if he were nominated."

"Suppose that Mr. Blaine was his opponent. Do you think Mr. Cleveland would be elected?" "I certainly think he would beat Mr. Blaine."

"By a larger majority than before?" "I am not a prophet."

"No, but what is your opinion from the present outlook?" "I think he would be elected if he ran against Mr. Blaine."

MR. CLEVELAND THE STRONGEST MAN. "How about Mr. Thurman?" "He is the strongest man that could be nominated."

"The strongest man in the Democratic party?" "That is my judgment. But everything depends to a large extent on how the labor vote will go in the coming year. The labor men may run a presidential candidate. In such an event no man could predict the result. If they were to go through the present campaign, the labor vote would be a very important factor."

"Do you think that a labor candidate for the presidency would draw a large vote in New York?" "Yes, and in Ohio, too. The labor vote is heavy in Cincinnati. It is a question how a large labor vote might affect the result in Ohio. I am satisfied myself that the labor vote is friendly to the Democracy. It is quite natural."

"One of the speakers in the Ohio convention to-day said the Democratic party was thoroughly united while the Republicans were at war with each other. Does it look that way to you, Mr. Thurman?" "Ohio is united. As for the Republicans, I read that they were at war, but it is hard to tell. The Republicans must carry Ohio or they are ruined. It is a very serious situation. I can say little about the present situation in Ohio. I have not been in the state for two months. I am out of politics forever."

"I AM ONLY A POOR OLD GHOST." "Why, Mr. Thurman, they are saying that you will lead the national party next year and be a candidate?"

"Nonsense. I will never run for a political office again. I am only a poor old ghost haunting the halls of the State House, and waiting for my day to come over in his boat for me. My day is gone."

"Who do you think will be the Republican candidate next year?" "Well, you ought to be able to judge as well as me. Who are the New York Republicans in favor of? I think the president next year must carry New York."

A TALK WITH THE OLD WOMAN. What is Senator Thurman said to be an "intelligent" answer to the question.

A representative of the INTELLIGENCER called upon Hon. Allen G. Thurman this morning. He and his wife were found at the residence of Rev. C. Reimann, on West King street, surrounded by several members of the Reimann family. Senator Thurman welcomed the INTELLIGENCER man provided he did not wish to interview him, and in a jocular way said he wished all reporters to believe that he was always armed with a brace of revolvers and a big knife, and then he chuckled as he sent the smoke of a good cigar curling towards the ceiling.

The reporter called Senator Thurman's attention to an interview printed in Friday's New York Herald and the senator answered that it was substantially correct, adding that when he saw the reporter's Democratic ticket of Ohio had not been completed. He considered the ticket from top to bottom a good one and believed there was a good fighting chance for its election. The senator then enumerated the Democratic victories and defeats that had taken place in Ohio during the last dozen years and gave it as his opinion that the Democratic chances were good, though much depended on that "unknown quantity" in politics, the labor vote.

The senator expressed the belief that Cleveland will be re-nominated and re-elected in 1892. He did not think it would be the Republican candidate for president. Mr. Reimann having remarked that she had read Blaine's book with much interest, Senator Thurman said that the first volume of Blaine's book was a very good one—a very fair exposition of political history—and one might almost suppose it to have been written by a Democrat. Until he read Blaine's book he did not think he could write history so well or so impartially.

Senator Thurman is suffering from lumbago; otherwise he is in good health. He will remain in Lancaster until Monday afternoon, possibly until Monday afternoon, and then go on to Creason, where after a few days' rest he and his wife will proceed to their home in Columbus, Ohio.

As an Issue Man. Samuel Little, a well-to-do and respected citizen of London Britain, Chester county, jumped from his bed-room window two nights ago and has not been seen since, though many neighbors have searched the neighborhood for him. He is slightly deranged from dyspepsia, and is about 55 years of age.

BY A FLASH OF LIGHTNING.

Two Men Instantly Killed While They Were Fishing in Prince's Bay.

Two men were struck by lightning and instantly killed while fishing Friday in Prince's bay, about two miles off Negoon Point, S. I. They were Michael J. Dixon, the ice cream manufacturer, and John P. Ryan, who has a wire room at Pearl and Whitehall streets, New York, and who also has charge of the ice cream stand in Seaside park. The fishermen left New York in company Thursday night and reached the Smith's boat house on Prince's bay about shortly after 8 o'clock. Here they had supper and put up for the night in a small tent.

Between 7 and 8 o'clock Friday morning they started for the fishing ground in a four-foot row boat, conveyed by the Smith's boat house. The boat was pulled towards the shore with a single car and towing some object over his little boat's gunwale. Ben Westcott, oysterman, jumped into a small boat and pulled to his assistance. He found that the object in tow was the dead body of a man, and that the Smith's boat was full of water with terror and excitement.

"In God's name, what's the matter?" asked the oysterman. "They've both been struck by lightning," was the reply. "One's here and the other's out yonder at the bottom of the bay."

Three colored men arrived on the scene, and together they took the body, which was that of Ryan, into their boat and took it ashore. Then all hands went to the scene of the disaster. Ryan's body was full of water, sunk flush with the surface of the bay. There was no sign of Dixon, and after marking the spot they towed the boat ashore.

Mr. Thurman, do you think that the revolution endorsing Mr. Cleveland is a fair expression of Democratic opinion in Ohio?" "I do. I think Mr. Cleveland is popular in Ohio. I think he is popular throughout the country."

THE COERCION LAW.

INDICATORS POINT TO A LESS SUCCESSFUL ENFORCEMENT THAN EXPECTED.

Some of the Officials Who Have to Determine the Procedure in Enforcing the Coercion Act Proposed to Make its Operation More Lenient than Former Statutes.

LONDON, July 23.—Great curiosity and considerable anxiety is manifested over the outcome of to-day's deliberations in Dublin on the question of setting the machinery of the coercion act in motion. The curiosity is confined to England and the anxiety less so in Ireland, but in neither is the belief as strong as it was a few weeks ago that the law will be enforced as rigidly as the Tories would like to have done. Of the confederate lord lieutenant is an uncompromising Tory. Mr. Balfour was of the stripe until the recent Parliamentary elections forced the government to modify its policy toward Ireland. Lord Ashbourne is inclined to give the tenants a chance for their lives and General Buller, who went to Ireland with the reputation, well earned, of a martinet, has shown himself to be even more disposed to act with fairness and justice toward the Irish tenantry than his predecessor in office, Sir Robert Hamilton, whose resignation was demanded because he was favorably disposed toward Mr. Gladstone's famous rule policy.

The Marquis of Londonderry, as viceroy of Ireland, will undoubtedly demand unrestricted exercise of the law, framed as it was for enforcement in the country for which government he is responsible, and in the circumstances his demand would seem to be in no way unreasonable; but the political considerations now to be taken into account will make the government chary about giving him the power in the execution of the law to which he is entitled. In advising strict enforcement of the law, should he do so, the viceroy would be opposed by the other three parties to the conference upon entirely dissimilar grounds. Mr. Balfour would oppose the suggestion because of the government's peculiar position which necessitates very material allowances to the changed state of public opinion on the part of the Conservative party if they would retain office. The Liberal would argue against it from the point of view of a man who has never been accused of those who were classed as Ireland's bitter enemies and has no desire at this late day to be placed in that category, although there is probably no more sentimental reason for his opposition, but General Buller would contend against the proposal from motives of justice. Holding, as he does, an exalted life position in the army, he is entirely removed from a position where he could be influenced by considerations of political preference and during the time that he has been in Ireland he has endeavored to observe the true relations between landlord and tenant that few men have ever had, or have taken advantage of if they did have. He does not think that anybody should tell him that nine-tenths of the so-called outrage committed in Ireland during the last year were directly traceable to the rapacity, injustice and even brutality of the landlord and although he has had to deal extensively with violators of the law he knows the proclivities the offenders have had and realizes the danger of giving full force to a law which would strip the tenant of his land while it reduces the rights and privileges of the tenant. In view of this variety of opinion among the rulers of Ireland it is scarcely safe to predict that an extremely well applied application of the coercion law will be decided upon, and it is safe to say that the conference will be adjourned to Dublin to report the condition of their respective localities and receive instructions which will experience no little surprise at the character of their orders if they have been the idea of paying off old scores through the enforcement of the crimes set to the law.

CHICAGO, July 23.—A cable to the New York Herald from Bridge of Earn, Scotland, says: A reporter called at Mr. Carnegie's residence today for the purpose of interviewing Mr. Blaine. He was met by Mr. Carnegie, who in answer to a question as to Mr. Blaine's plans, said: "Of course we don't know what he is doing, but he and his family are to make a little excursion to the Highlands, and he is to be accompanied by the Trossachs. Mr. Blaine's understanding, comes back here after a few months we are to have a four-in-hand tour around a Berdeenshire Highlands. Mr. Carnegie and I are determined to buy a new house in Scotland, and we are considering several offers. You know we are going to address the Glasgow Liberal Association September 13 on American republicanism. About the same time we go to New York where several national stations are to be held. One of them, of course, will be presented by me, and we will see a number of home rulers down here in the British Parliament room. American visitors there will be Mr. Phelps, my principal partner, and Mr. Channing M. Dewey and Mrs. M. H. C. Frick, head of the college fund. The reporter wished to see Mr. Blaine, but the gentleman declined to be interviewed."
