LANCASTER, AUGUST 3, 1887.

Next Boath's Centennial.

Of all the centennial celebrations that nve been so much in vogue during the past fifteen years in this country, none has had fifteen theme for popular interest and instration than the commemoration of the adoption of the federal constitution, which is to take place in Philadelphia next nonth with pomp and ceremony. The oming of our century plant in that sity in 1876 was a great epoch in the life of people. The Fourth of July, a huned years after the Declaration, was with discernment and just apprestation for the culmination of that celebration; and from both a moral and an aic view the great "centennial" astified the plans of its projectors and the enthusiasm of the people of the whole country. It aroused and stimulated patriotic sentiment; it subdued sectional strangement ; it quickened the finer tastes. and it was at once an exposition of the material interests of the country and an aid to their development, such as years of inary progress would not have pro-

It is to be remembered, however, that the determination of the colonies to be free does not mark the actual beginning of our nationality; nor yet the achievement of triumph by arms of the Revolutionary forces; neither was the resulting federation of states the bond of that permanent mion, under the beneficent operations of which this country has become the wonder of the world. The marvel of our early anship-the crowning work of the wise and good men who seem to have abounded in that period, when there was comparative paucity of population-was the making of the federal constitution. that instrument which the loftiest English criticism has declared to be "the most wonderful work ever struck off at a given time by the brain and purpose of man."

With our vast increase of population and nagical changes in other elements of empire; and amid the shifting tides of political thought that have submerged some great powers and shaken all the world's governments in the past hundred years, our constitution has endured with slight changes, few amendments and constantly increasing ratification ; the judgment of the

We publish to-day an article by an army son, who are always discovering son officer suggesting the establishment of a military post near Lancaster, which is commended to the careful reading of our business men.

As the Indians have very nearly ceased to be a serious menace to our frontier and their resistance must yearly grow more insignificant, a larger part of the army will doubtless be moved eastward and posts must be built for them. Lancaster county is certainly well-suited for the cheap management of such an establishment and there is no reason why our ousiness men and farmers should not profit by it. The post would probably be garrisoned by men recruited from the county they would be supported by the produce of

INASMUCH as the state of Pennsylvania has pretty regularly an idle balance of over a million dollars in the favored depositorie of the state treasurer, it is difficult to see why the revenue commissioners should insist so rigorously on collecting the taxes on such unproductive articles of luxury as watches, furniture and pleasure carriages. At best there is great irregularity and shortage in the ansessment of these objects of tration and much inequality in its collection. These considerations should move lively interest in the events of its cenial celebration, now so near at hand. To the people of Pennsylvania they have a closer and more immediate concern than to those of any other state. The convention mot in our metropolis; its serious work was fully accomplished there, and through the streets of that city moved the brilliant pageant, the greatest of its day, with which the representatives of all the forces of the young republic celebrated the greater victories of peace and of self-government. Few of those whom we bonor for their part in the struggle toward freedom from the parent country were missing from the council which reaped the best fruits of the victory ; Washington, Adams, Jefferson, Hamilton and Madison were among the leaders in the new civil triumph ; and to the best thought and most powerful influences of the day Pennsylvania contributed our matchless Franklin, the Morrises, Dickinson, Mifflin, McKean, Clymer, Rush, Gallatin, Ingersoil and James Wilson, an illustrious man whose eminent services to the country and to his commonwealth have been too often forgotten. Bancroft speaks of the final accomplishment of the event, the circumstances of it and of Pennsylvania's part in it as " one more great duty to his llow-citizens and to mankind fulfilled by Franklin, one more honor won by Philadelphia as the home of the union, one new victory by Pennsylvania as the citadel of the love of the one indivisible country." Surely there is much in these recollections to awaken the pride and quicken the interat of Pennsylvanians, as citizens at once of the state and of the union. Their duties nd their relations cannot be better studied than in a retrospect of that period.

WITH commendable forethought the citizens of Louisville have placed the check of a ommon sense suggestion in the way of the movement towards Washington of delega ions anxious to invite the president to visit their cities on his Western tour. The Louisville men know that these little excursion t committees of several hundred are expen. sive and troublesome, they crowd the execu tive mansion, wear the executive carpets and tire the executive arm with vigorous Western sbakes. So the Louisville people have resolved to hold a big meeting next week to assure the president a most hearty welcome, and they will have a big photograph of this meeting taken and sent to Washington with TOR RENT. an invitation. The president will accept at his peril, for the idea is so beautifully chesp and grand that countiess cities of the West will follow suit, and mammoth photographs will strew the avenues of Washington as thickly as the paim leaf fans in the late warm weather. THE attorney general of the state, its law officer, whose opinion on legal questions rules the departments of the common wealth, and without whose direction suits for the state cannot be instituted, has given it as his view that the taxes on watches, furniture and pleasure carriages are not collectible. Never-theless the revenue commissions instruct the county boards to collect it; and in some counties, including Lancester, it is paid ; in others it is not. Most persons where the tax is enforced will be disposed to pay it rather than make the expensive single-handed contest against its collection. This will result in inustics. People here who are paying the tax will never get it back, even if the county is finally allowed a credit for it on the last adjudication of the question. The county comsome arrangement by which if the tax is abated it might be restored directly to those who pay it, or deducted from their taxes next year.
