The Wheel of Fortune Less than a score of years ago, John T. Hoffman, governor of New York for two terms, was one of the very foremost Democrats in the nation, and no one was nearer the party leadership. He had been recorder and mayor of New York city, and discharged well and with public applause all the duties entrusted to him. He was born in the state, on the banks of its great Hudson river, descending from an old Dutch family. He was highly educated, and had a distinguished presence and most agreeable manner. His ability was of a high order, and he well merited the high esteem in which he was universally held. But when he was thus strongly mounted for a seemingly long ride upon the highway of political life, suddenly his public career came to an end; and the strange thing is that all this came about through no great fault of his. He went down through the Tweed exposure, because he was a member of Tammany Hall, and had received its support in his political candidacies. He had no part in the wrongs done by the men who supported him because te gave strength and adornment to their political body. He was no more worthy of condemnation because of their sins than was any other Democrat who had no connection with them save as he belonged to the same political party. Gov. Hoffman ought not to have suffered in public opinion any more than Mr. Tilden, who had as close connection with Tweed until the end came, when fortunately he was able to make capital for himself out of in the exposure of his associates. Governor Hoffman would have led as strong a charge against the corruption in Tammany hall, doubtless, if he had been in position to do it. But as he was not and was the governor supported by Tweed, he became an object of public distrust. He was too honorable and sensitive a man tively early age of sixty years. It was a strange life, so brilliant in its early prime and so full of promise of the highest distinction for the years that yet it was written should pass away so quietly. It is a public misfortune that Governor Hoffman's services should have been so soon lost. We see no figure among our public men that would have the strangers, I thank you a thousand times for your boundless kindness and sympathy." more worthily filled the highest station. Until the advent of the present national administration there was no public place that a New York Democrat of great distinction and ability could fill, the state and the nation being Republican; and Cleveland, with that strange obtuseness in selection which enabled him to overlook Thurman, also failed to p'ace Hoffman, while selecting much inferior metal from New York for cabinet and other

Br. Gould's Innocence.

Jay Gould has got back to New York and has had the Tribune interview him that he may tell the people how wrong they are to suspect that he or his sons are putting down the price of Missouri-Pacifig. He declares that it is worth double what it is selling for, and that he has put more money in it than he has ever in his life put into all other things beside. His observations on this point are not so clear as to make it certain that he means to may that he has yet all of this stock. But it matters little, since the public never feel bound to believe anything that Mr. Gould says.

Mr. Gould especially grieves that any body should think of indicting him for his very virtuous action towards the Denver and Kansas Pacific railroads. Mr. Gould is seemingly astonished that there is not on the other hand, a spontaneous public movement to erect a monument to him for his great public works, that have so benefitted the country, binding its extremes together in iron bands. Mr. Gould considers that he is a victim. Says the reporter : " His eyes flashed, his lips became set, he raised his hand and let fly these words: The motives behind this assault are a newspaper, a cable company and-a woman."

Here is a description in the highest style of the reportorial art, and a declaration that ought to make somebody quiver; the woman, anyway. Doubt less the newspaper is the Herald, and the cable company is Bennett and Maclay; but the woman we do not guess. It seems to be a strong combination, however, that has started after Mr. Gould's hide, and one would think that he ought to have staid at home to meet it; to say nothing of the district attorney. Instead of which, panoplied in innocence, Mr. Gould sailed away in his yacht; perbaps thinking that a stretch of salt water would not be a bad thing to surround his innocence, until an accommodating New York judge should find that the statute of limitations ran against his

Kansas Pacific philanthropy.

The Care of Cooper. There appears to be some truth in the reported project to unsent Field Marshal Cooper from his place in the saddle as chairman of the Republican state committee. It is said that he has too much Blaineism about him, and the fear evidently is that he would become the leader of the Pennsylvania Republicans if Blaine should get the presidential nomination. Besides it is said that he is an ardent aspirant for governor, and has been using his position at the head of the party machine to further that object. Well, what of This? Mr. Thomas V. Cooper is no statesman in the sense which that term is understood to mean one broad minded and excelling in forersic skill. But he is just as good a wire puller and machine manager as Don Cameron or Matt Quay. The success of these worthies in their political aspirations gives Cooper a natural desire to seek similar honors. In l'ennsylvania one need not be a man of force to secure political elevation in the Republican ranks. Let him be a successful machine politician, and though he possesses a third-class intellect, he need not fear to lay claim to the highest offices in the gift

What They Need.

Mr. Gowen is seeking to persuade the inter-state commission to ask for such addition to the law as will make the decrees of the commission effective against the railroads through judicial process. We do not know whether the precise methods recommended by Mr. Gowen are the best, but it is clear enough that the decrees of the commission should be promptly enforceable under the law by fine and imprisonment as well as by damages.

We are satisfied that nothing will bring railroad directors to their knees but a jail. Suits for damages have small terror for them, since the stockholders pay them. But when they face a fine and a jail for action notoriously and maliciously against the law, they will become law-abiding. They do not like jail fare. Men who travel the country in their private cars, paid for by their stockholders, well f d upon the fat of the land, with houses by the seashore and in the mountains and the cities, free as the birds to roam about and pluck rich fruits and flowers, will be very careful how they risk the loss of this ziry, fairy life.

Coopen's head is wanted because he i too much of a Blaine man. This is a strange plea to make against a Pennsylvania Re

MARY ANDERSON scored a great triump in her farewell performance at the Lyceum theatre in London on Saturday night. She was playing "A Winter's Tale," and was compelled to go before the curtain seven times. In response to vigorous demands not to feel this keenly, and it seems to for a speech, Miss Anderson, who was vishave caused him to abandon political life, ibly sifected, said: "You have so loaded me with the best of gifts, your sympathy and encouragement, that I should indeed be ungrateful did I not leave you with a sad beart and the deepest regrets. That in but chiefly enjoying the leisure that the so called unpoetical nineteenth century ample fortune gave him and feeding a play so classic and replete with rea postry as 'A Winter's Tale' should run successfully longer than it has ever before done stace the great master created it 300 years ago, speaks, I think, volumes for the cultured refinement and taste of the London public of to-day. It seems, slas! that one is always saying 'good-bye,' but I hope to be with you again in a year or so, with perhaps another Shakespearean creation. In the meantime, my friends, to me no longer

> JAY GOULD says he left a bitter enemy behind him, having buried neuralgia in the Atlantic ocean.

Tire Harrisburg correspondent of the Pittsburg Dispatch, speaking of the change in the head of the Democratic state com mittee, save: "The fact is the election of Chairman Kisner was accomplished at the expense of the most unblushing bribery and corruption. In some instances money was paid outright for votes, and in other cases patronage was promised, places pledged, and even threats of removal from office made to secure support for the successful candidate."

The story is apparently taken from the whole cloth because no names are given. The writer dectares : "A committeeman from Lancaster county, who had a few days previously been named for a position in the Philadelphia mint, but had not been confirmed by the treasury department, was told that unless he would vote for Kisper the confirmation would be withheld."

THE Delaware County Record, published at Media, by Joseph Chadwick, has closed its tenth year. Its editorial columns are controlled by an able writer, and the other departments are excellent.

EX GOVERNOR JOHN T. HOFFMAN, of Now York, who has just died in Wies baden, Germany, was a towering figure in the politics of the country twenty-five years ago. He came of a famous family and with a splendid legal education became one of the youngest judges ever elected to the New York bench. Theu successively be was elected recorder, mayor and governor of the state. In all these posts he enjoyed the distinction of a re-election. He was swept from public life in 1872, when the Tweed ring was scourged out of existence in New York city. He was in no way identifled with the corruption of this organization, but happened to have their support for effice, and he west down in the general wreck. Since then he has been living in retirement in New York, practicing his profession, and enjoying the highest respect of those of all shades of party. PHILADELPHIA is excited ever a sup-posed intention of the Reading railroad company to bring its depot to Twelith and Market streets. It is not at all likely that it has any such purpose, because it does not seem to be a sensible one. It would necessitate a very unnecessary crookedness in its road to take it to Twelfth and Market which would not be a better terminus then Tenth and Market or Arch, which would be reached with a straight line.
