THE INTELLIGENCER,

A Supreme Court Opinion. The supreme court of Pennsylvania ists in the construction which it some time ago put upon the constitution and laws of the state, and which serves to deprive the owners of real catate on Filbert street, Philadelphia, of compensation from the Pennsylvania railroad company for the damages undoubtedly suffered by them in the construction of the elevated

It will be noted that this damage is conceded; and it is admitted that the law of the state gives compensation for samsges caused by the construction or alteration of railroads.

It would seem that there was no chance at all for the contention that the injury done to property on Filbert street by the building of the Pennsylvania railroad, should not be paid for; and yet there is but one judge on the Pennsylvania supreme bench who thinks that it should ba. Judga Sterrett alone so considers.

That Judge Sterrett is right and his lleagues wrong is, we think, the public sentiment. When the injury done is conceded, and the law requiring corporations to pay for the injury done in the building of their works is found upon the statute book, the case is closed in the public mind and judgment is given against the corporation.

Judgment against corporations is not so easily given in our courts ; though we do not think that our supreme court, as at present constituted, is justly chargeable with being under corporation dominion. There are very fair judges on it, who have agreed to this decision. The ground upon which they place it is that the rail. road company is pursuing its lawful occupation in doing this damage to Filbert est property, and that private injury must be done, in this age of physical progress, for the public good ; which is all true, and yet the fact does not afford any reason why the public improvement, accruing to the benefit of the corporation providing it, should be made without paying the damage for the injury done to private property when that damage can be ascertained. And the only reason advanced by the court for refusing such compensation in this case is that no limit can be placed to the allowance, if the Filbert street property owners are compensated, but that other property owners more remote from the railroad might claim damages. This we understand to be the argument; which is readily met by the statement that the any is proved it should be paid for.

Tupper on the Treaty.

Bir Charles Tupper made a long speech in the Canadian House of Commons on the bill to ratify the fisheries treaty. There is small danger that Canada will fail to ratify, in spite of the noisy dissat isfaction of the Eastern provinces, and this elaborate effort on the part of Sir Charles was probably made with more view to effect upon the United States Senate than any influence upon the Canadian Commons. He said that the treaty of 1854 had been abrogated because of a mistaken impression in the states that the British provces had sympathized with the South. He claimed that this was an error, as ten Canadians had fought in the Northern ranks for every one who had fought for the South, and a large number of Canadians were receiving pensions from the United States. All this had nothing whatever to do with the question before the House and reference to it could only have been for effect upon the sanguine-shirted senstors of the United States who must be taken back to war days before they can be stimulated to intelligent interest in modern affairs.

Having riveted senatorial attention by this blow at the statesmen of war times, he proceeded most cautiously to discuss the treaty, begging the opposition not to press him to state its advantages, " as every word uttered would be used by the other party to the contract." He claimed that it averted a commercial war which would have ensued if the president had forced the iron intercourse bill passed by the United States, and a very narrow line separated commercial war from actual war. A great disaster had been averted, but " suppose this treaty is not sdopted by the United States Senate-a not improbable contingency, in view of the near approach of the presidential election and the increased bitterness of purty strife;" even then he would not ler the time and trouble wasted, and though hoping that there were statesmen enough in the Republican party to over-weigh party advantage, he believed that the Democratic party to-day " possessed the confidence of the majority of the people of the United States, and would connue to possess it, and that the result of the treaty would be that that party would, in all probability, take steps to provide for enlarged trade relations as soon as desired by the people of both countries."

For State Rights.

The supreme court of the United States in the oleomargarine case, did not enter at all into the merit of the question but simply declared that it was without urisdiction to review the decisions of the est court in New York state has decided the question differently from the Pennrania court, and it is therefore lawful make and sell oleomargarine in New ork. And it is not in Pennsylvania. he court of appeals of New York holds at the legislature cannot forbid an business; the supreme court of Pernsylvania says it may. The United tes supreme court says it is no busiof the United States what business ay be done in a state, which is for state on, when the business done is lawul under the federal constitution. This is a decided declaration in favor of state

A Jack in the Box. Andrew Carnegie is before the public to day in two aspects; it is cabled from the old world that he has rented a castle in Scotland, just at the moment that Philadelphia journals report him berating before the Contemporary club, the aristocracy of England as a very worth-

Mr. Carnegie has lately published a book treating of " Democracy in England," and seems to have found a gentleman, Mr. Ellis Yarnall, in the Contemporary club, who did not have as profound a belief in the soundness of the conclusions of that book as Mr. Carnegie has; and under the stimulus of the discussion, Mr. Carnegie was moved to call the Prince of Wales a "blackguard, about whom no one had to believe the unpleasant stories told of him, because they believe themselves. To such a man he would not introduce his wife and daughter." He said that John Bright, whom Mr. Yarnell followed, when showing Americans the House of Lords always said he was showing them the greatest lot of blackguards possible, and compared their "bearing" with that of the House of Commons very unfavorably. Carlisle, he said, wrote favorably of aristocracy in the glamour of one who didn't know them. "I know them," said Mr. Mr. Carnegio. We incline to the opinion that Mr Carnegie will not find it convenient now to occupy that castle in Scotland. And in truth we wonder that he leased it in view of his poor opinion of castle owners. A man of so pronounced democratic sentiment and with such hostility to aristocratic institutions ought to have no use for castles. We have observed, however, heretofore like strange contradiction between Mr. Carnegie's theories and practices. Living in a castle and denouncing aristocracy is not in stronger contrast than profession of devotion to the interests of labor, while shutting down mills and furnaces because he can not get laborers in iron cheap enough, in the location that in the general opinion is the most favorable in the country for the econom cal manufacture of iron.

Mr. Carnegie doubtless thinks h knows the laboring class, of whom he once was one ; just as he thinks he knows the aristocracy, among whom he seems sedulously to seek to mingle. Our judgment is that Mr. Carnegie knows neither; and does not know even himself; or perhaps much else.

THE argument of Mr. Franklin B Gowen before the committee on inter-state commerce of the United States Senate, a copy of which has been received, shows that Mr. Gowen's legal acumen is just as great as it used to be.

Or late a great deal of attention has been given to the use of oil by ships in distress during heavy storms at sea, and govern-ment commissions have determined the best kind of oil for the purpose, and directed its use, but Wilhelm Meissel, an officer of the North German Lloyd steamship line. has invented an oil rocket that will probably make the use of oil in storms univer sal. The invention consists of the rocket proper and an oil cylinder with an exploding chamber. The cylinder is fashioned of thin tin, soldered at the bottom and top, damage must be proved. If there is no and the exploding chamber is also made of damage shown none can be recovered ; if tin and has a hollow tube, reaching into the centre of the oil cylinder, filled with powder. The rocket may be exploded under the water, the oil, being lighter, paturally rising to the surface.

Many tests of the rockets have been made from the steamer Werra. Last November when on a voyage between New York and Bremen, rockets were exploded success fully under and above the water, producing a comparative calm over a large area. Before an imperial commission five large rockets were fired 4 500 feet, and the oil from them covered an area of 2,000 square feet, "As soon as the oil had spread the rolling of the sea was quieted down. These rockets will probably be of great value to ife saving stations along the coast in calming the water between the shore and vessels in distress."

AT last it has been discovered why Mrs. Cleveland is so wise. She is an indefatigable reader of the newspapers.

THE latest issue of Our Dumb Animals is conspicuous with a black border around every page, in memory of Henry Bergh, A touching and appropriate copy of Landseer's picture, " The Chief Mourner," is presented, wherein a faithful dog is rested mournfully watching the coffin of dead master.

THE State Sani ary convention at Lewisburg, Union county, to be held under the auspices of the state board of health, Thursday and Friday, May 17th and 18th, promises to be unusually fruitful of intelligent discussion. The programme for the opening day includes an address by the governor ; address of welcome by D. J. Hill, L. L. D., president of Bucknell University "The Prevention of Contagious Opthalmia," Dr. P. N. K. Schwenk, of Philadel phia; "Diseased Meats and the Prevention of Trichinosis," Dr. G. W. Frey, Sunbury, "The Water Supply of Lewisburg," Pro W. G. Owens, Bucknell University. At the evening session the annual address will be delivered by Hor. S. T. Davis, M. D., Lancaster ; "Cremation as a Means of Dis posal of the Dead," will be treated by Dr. B. F. Hyatt, Lewisburg. The second day's programme is equally entertaining.

POOR MRS. JAMES BROWN POTTER, after traveling all the way to Cheyenne, Wyoming territory, was greeted by a small audience, because she patronized the Chicago, Burlington & Quincy railroad. How could she be expected to know what a "seab " read was ?
