The Battenbergs.

It is a curious spectacle that royalty affords to-day. A brace of Battenbergs have set them all by the ears by the simple and ancient plan of independent and bold proceedings in the matrimonial line. These princes were of no great account as such stock is valued, but there is acthing charmingly attractive in the confident assurance with which Henry and Alexander have undertaken to scramble up among the thrones and sceptres, the one by alliance with comrcial and naval England and the other by aspiring to the hand of a princess of martial Germany. With the exception of Queen Victoria, the crowned heads give a unanimous shake of disapproval and disgust at their presumption, and though the eminent abilities of Alexander seem to make his case rather stronger and each gup can fire two shots a minute. than that of his brother when suing for the hand of Beatrice, crowned heads don't take such trifles into consideration. ar far gone in hereditary insani could marry any princess in Europe with the smiling approval of the heads referred to, but for a brace of squareheaded German princelets to presume to out out the heirs apparent of various thrones by marrying members of the proudest royal houses in all Europe is a breath taking state of things. It is now reported that Alexander has consented to wait a little while ; and all things considered this is wise, for by it he will gain popular sympathy for himself and friends, and to persist in the face of the threats of Bismarck and the fear of trouble with Russia would be to show a disregard for the welfare of Germany that could not be easily atoned for. Besides he has found the support of his brother's mother-in-law rather damaging in its effect upon the people of Germany, with whom he will probably be identified in the future, whatever happens in Bulgaria. They are not very enthusiastic in their admiration for the old lady who has enlivened the monotopy of royal life by the publication of "Life in the Highlands." and other books equally remarkable.

Beaver and Quay. CRAMP & Sons have just finished the dynamite gun ordered by the Italian government and have shipped it to Fort Lafa yette, where it will be tested by Captain Zallnski. This gun is to be managed entirely by hydraulic machinery and will be nounted on an iron base with a stone foun dation. If it proves satisfactory, Italy will probably order a number at once for harbor detense, and will also begin building dynamite cruisers. Excepting the English, the Italians are now giving more attention to their navy and coast defenses than any other nation, and it is evident that they are determined to be considered the masters of the Mediterranean. They have less prejudice against novel and foreign inventions than the English, and have shown a readiness to recognize a good thing that will tell to their advantage in case of war. England has just launched a giant ironelad at a cost of $5,000,000, but Italy passed that stage of naval architecture some time ago, though she did not go farther in monster building than to turn out several three million dollar ships, and she is now building swift torpedo boats and cruisers. Our dynamite cruiser Yorktown will be launched on the 28th of thi month. It will have four guns fixed at an angle of 16 degrees in a parallel line, and they will have to be almed by stcoring the veasel. The veasel will carry thirty shells

A Child Lacorated by Dogs

Thomas Malone, the five-year old son o one of the residents of Langby Jack's Beach, Jersey city, toddied from hi parents' canal boat to play in the muddy read. Four large degs owned by the man after whom the beach was named saw the child, and one of them, a big bloodhound, pounced upon the boy. The other three dogs followed, and still others were attracted to the spot, and at one time six dogs were on top of the defenseless boy. He was finally rescued, but his face and body were terribly lacerated. He may recover. The dogs were alterward shot by the police.

Sowden's Crack.

What is the matter with brother Sowden ? He found himself voting love with the Republicans in the House in favor of the disret, tax bill. He had had some Democratic company for a week ; and the House had consequently been able to do nothing, the mass of the Democratic members refusing to agree to the bill. Mr. Sowden's Democratic company left him in obedience to the de-cision of the Democratic caucus ; but he would not move, having promised himsel to stick till the crack of doom.

We are inclined to think that the crack has come for brother Sowden ; and that his constituents will not return him aga'n to Congress. We are sorry, because he has been generally a sound and sensible man. If his judgment had been good about the direct tax bill, he might have successfully defended before his constituents his persistency in sticking to it. Constituents like representatives who stick when they are right ; but such representatives need to be sure that they are so. The direct tax bill, in proposing to pay back a tax paid by the Northern states during the first year of the war, cannot be defended as a measure of justice, without holding that all the taxes paid by the North during the war should be repaid ; which Mr. Sowden would hardly claim.

Law For Rich Men.

They have queer judicial ways in New York. The Hollanders who were fleeced by Gould and Sage have been trying to have them indicted. One grand jury refused to do it, on the ground that the statute of limitation was a bar ; thus deelding a disputed question of law; for it is contended that the statute does not run from the date of the concealed crime. Then the judge was asked to send the case sgain before the grand jury ; ad when he refused, another judge was d upon, and he also has declined : n given by both being that the in its interpretation of the of their rivals. The Senate passed the bill by 29 to 15 there being 32 absent and a number of pairs. Now the Billings road need not be pushed and the other hardly will be until its owners buy peace with stock or in some other way. They can hardly afford to let enca. their property remain unproductive, and the other mon who have expended little or nothing can make their own terms. If both bills had passed the same Congress, there would not be injustice, but in this case the wrong seems clear and the cry of opposing monepely hypocritical. If this short road ever exhibited tendencies to monopoly it would be easy enough to build another, and others will reach these coal fields in due time.

A BERLIN correspondent of the New York Times paints a very dark picture of Crown Prince William, of Germany. A good deal of it is more guessing from his personal appearance. The immaginative writer says that the old emperor and th dying emperor "were impressive in the sense of a noble old mastif, or of a huge, honest, shaggy, deep-chested boar hound. This young man suggests instead the no tion of a perfectly bred sleuth hound, under whose smooth, delicately soft coat lie muscles of steel, and in whose mouthsinister legacy of nature-is the inherent taste of human blood. Not that his face is sullen or savage in its expression. Its habitual cast in repose is calm, self possessed, somewhat meditative, without wrinkles either on the brow or at the ends of the mouth. The eyes, too, are grave, intent, without being severe." This is certainly rather hard on the young man. Condemnation based on a guess at character from personal appearance is certainly not very logical, and the correspondent seems to feel this, for he brings forward to support his judgment the statement that all women, English at lussi, who have had any hand in bringing up this man, hold him in detestation and horror based on the general impression that he is cold, selfish and cruel, with great abilities, but without conscience or any softening virtues. All this must be taken with salt, for the writer shows English sympathies, and the prince is thoroughly ble key. German and not on the best of terms with the English empress, his mother. Of course this sketch of the coming ruler of Garmany is followed by a prophecy that he fully intends to inaugurate a policy ci conquest as soon as he reaches the throne, and no attention is paid to the manly and wise declaration he recently made of hi horror at so criminal and foolish a policy.
