ICE BOUND.

"Ay," said he, "you are your old self—a bit worried looking, but that'll pass. Stout and burned. Odd's heart! Paul, if you have passed through the experiences Wilkinson has given me a sketch of we must have your life, man; we must have your life—for the booksellers."

"You are your old self."

Well, I need not detain you by reciting all the civilities and congratulations which he and I exchanged. He and Wilkinson had arrived at Deal at 3 o'clock that afternoon, and after a hurried meal had hired a lugger and started at once or Beachy Head. It was now 3 o'clock in the morning; and what I may consider a truly extraordinary circumstance is, that they had sailed as true a course for the schooner as if she had lain plain to the gaze at the very start; that since the night had drawn down they had met no vessel of any kind or description until they vessel of any kind or description until they came up to us; that in all probability they would have run stem on into us if they had not seen our lights, and that their seeing our lights had caused them to hall us their hoy!" being instantly answered by Crom-

"Well," said I, "there are stranger things to tell of than this, even. Now, Wilkinson, and you, Billy and Cromwell, get us a good supper and mix a proper bowl. How many more of you are in the lugger?" "Four, sir," said one of the boatmen.

"Then fetch as many as may safely leave the boat," said I. "Billy, get candles and make a good light here. Throw on coal, lanys; there's enough to carry us home."

I saw Mason gazing curiously about him.

"Tis like a tale out of the 'Arabian Nights," Paul," he exclaimed.

"Ay," said I, "but written in bitter prose, and no hint of enchantment anywhere. But, thank God, you are come! I have passed a dismal time of expectation, I promise you."
I added, softly, "I have something secret; we will sup first; man, I shall amaze you! must talk apart presently."
He bowed his head.

Three more boatmen arrived, giving us the company of five of them. Soon there was a hearty sound of frying and a smell of good things upon the air. Pitt put plates and glasses upon the cabin table, two great bowls of punch were brewed, and in a little time of punch were brewed, and in a little time we had all fallen to. I whispered Wilkinson, who sat next me: "These boatmen know nothing of our business; I shall have to take Mr. Mason apart and arrange with him. These fellows may not be fit for our service. Let no hint escape you."
"Right, sir," said be.

This I said to disarm his suspicions should he see me talking alone with Mr. Mason. He entertained us with an account of his excur-sion to London, and then, partly to appease the promund curiosity of the boatmen and partly to save time when I should come to confer with my relative, I gave them the story of my shipwreck, and told how I had met with the schooner and how I had managed to escape with her.

"And now, Mason," said I, "while our friends here empty these bewls, come you with me to the cook room." And with that we quitted the cabin. "D'ye mean to tell me, Paul," was the first question my relative asked, "that this vessel was on the ice eight-and-forty years?" 'Yes," I replied.

What we have been eating and drinking,

is that forty-eight years old, too?"
"Ay, and older."
"Well, such a thing shall make me credu-lous enough to duck old women for witches. But what brandy—what brandy! Never had spirit such a bouquet. Every pint is worth its weight in guineas to a rich man. To think of Deal boatmen and niggers swilling such "Mason," said I, speaking low, "give me now your attention. In the run of this schooner are ten chests loaded with money, bars of silver and gold, and jewelry. This vessel was a pirate, and her people valued their booty at £90,000 to £100,000." His jaw fell. He stared as if he knew not whether it was he or I that was mad.

"Here is evidence that I speak the truth," said I. "A_little sample only—but look at it!" And I put the pirate captain's watch

He eyed it as though he discredited the intelligence of his sight, turned it about and returned it to me with a faint "Heaven preerve me." Then said be, still faintly: "You found some of the pirates alive!"

"Who told you that the people of the vesel valued their plunder at that amount? I answered by giving him the story of the

He listened with a gaze of consternation. I saw how it was; he believed my sufferings had affected my reason. There was only one way to settle his mind; I took a lantern, and asked him to follow me. As we passed through the cabin I whispered to Wilkinson that I meant to show my relative the lading below, and bade him keep the Deal men about him. I had the keys of the chests in my pocket; lifting the after hatch, we entered the lazarette, and Mason gazed about him with astonishment. But I was in too great a hurry to return to suffer him to idly stand and stare. I opened the second hatch and descended into the run, and crawling to the jewel chest opened it, removed a few of the small arms, and bade him look for himself. "Incredible! incredible!" he cried. "Is it possible! is it possible! Well, to be sure!"

And for some moments he could find no more to say, so amazed and confounded was he. I quickly showed him the gold and silver ingots, and then returned the fire arms and locked the chests.

"These," said I, emphatically, pointing to the cases, "have been my difficulty; not the lading, though there is value there too. My crew knew nothing of these chests-of their value, I mean; they believe them cases of small arms. How am I to get them ashore! If I tell the truth, they will be seized as piratical plunder. If I [equivocate, I may tumble into a pit of difficulties. I durst not carry them to the Thames-the river swarms with thieves and custom house people. I am terrified to linger here, lest I be boarded and the booty discovered. There is but one plan, I think; we must hire some Deal smuggiers to run these chests and the cargo for The boat now alongside might serve and I don't doubt the men are to be had at their own price."

My relative had regained his wits, which the sight of the treasure had temporarily scattered, and surveyed me thoughtfully while I spoke, and then said, "Let us return to the fire; I think I have a better scheme than yours."

The men still sat around the table talking. ne liquor yet lay in one of the bowls, and the fellows were happy enough. I smiled at Wilkinson as I passed, that he might suppose our inspection below very satisfactory, and I saw him look meaningly and pleasantly at Washington Cromwell, who sat with a laced

"Paul," said Mason, sitting down and folding his arms, "your smuggling plan will not do. It would be the height of madness to trust those chests to the risks of running and to the honesty of the rogues engaged in that

"What is to be done?" "Tell me your lading," said he,
I gave it to him as accurately as I could.
"Why," he exclaimed. "a single heat would.

three a long time to discharge ye; observe the perils—several boats would mean a large number of men; they would eat you up; they would demand so much you would have nothing left. And suppose they opened the cheste! No, your scheme is worthless."

"What's to do, then, in God's name?"

"I'll tell you?" he exclaimed, smilling with the complacemey of a man who is master of a great fancy. "I shall sail to Dover at once. The now a quarter past 4. Give me twelve hours to make Dover; I shall post straight to London and be there by early morning. Now, Paul, attend you to this. Today is Wednesday; by to-morrow night you must contrive to bring your ship to an anchor off Barking Level."

"The Thames!" I cried.

He nodded.

He nodded. I looked at him anxiously. He leaned to I looked at him anxiously. He leaned to me, putting his hand on my leg.

"I own a lighter," said he. "She will he alongside of you at dust. I have people of my own whom I can trust. The lighter will empty your hold and convey the lading to a thip chartered by me, arrived from the Black sea on Sunday and lying in the, pool. The stuff can be sold from that ship as it is.

"But the chests—the chests, Mason!"

"They shall be lowered into another boat and taken ashore and put into a wagon that will be in waiting—I in it—and driven to my home."

I clapped him on the shoulder in a trans-ort.

"Nobly schemed, indeed;" I cried. "But have we nothing to fear from the customs

"No, not low down the river and at dark. You bring up for convenience, d'ye see! Mind it is dark when you anchor. A lighter and boat shall be awaiting you. It is down the river, you know, that all the lumpers drop with the lighters they go adrift in from ships' sides. There's more safety in smuggling over Thames mud than on this coast shingle. One thought more: You say that Wilkinson believes the chests hold small arms!"
"Yes."

"Let me hurry, then, Paul. That brandy should fetch you half a guinea a pint. You are in luck's way, Paul. See that you bring your ship along safely. Till to-morrow night!" He clasped and wrung my hand, and ran into the cabin.

"Now, lads, off with us!" he cried. "Off to Dover! Put me ashere there smartly, and you shall find your account. Off now—time Five minutes afterward the boat was gone.

When fortune falls in love with a man she makes him a bounteous mistrees. Every-thing fell out as I could have desired. We got our anchor at 5, and by daybreak were off Hastings, jogging quietly along toward London river, the weather conveniently ob-scure, the wind south, and forty hours before scure, the wind south, and forty hours before us to do the run in. I exactly explained my relative's scheme to Wilkinson and the others, who declared themselves perfectly satisfed, Wilkinson adding that though he had not objected to the Deal smuggling project he throughout considered the risk too heavy to adventure. I told them that Mr. Mason believed he could immediately find a purchaser for the small arms, in which case they would have to be sent privately ashore; and to give a proper color to this ruse I and to give a proper color to this ruse I made them pack away all the remaining weapons in the arms room and carry them to the run, ready to be taken with the other

Once fairly round the Forelands, half my M Once fairly round the Forelands, half my anxieties fell from ma. There was no longer the French cruiser or privateer to be feared; and however wonderingly the people of my own country's vessels might stare at the uncommon figure of my schooner, they could find no excuse to board us. Besides, as I have said, I was greatly helped by the weather, which, continuing hazy, though happily never so thick as to oblige me to stop, delivered me to the sight only of such vessels as passed close, and offered me only as a mere smudge to the shore.

We arrived off Barking Level at 7 o'clock on the Thursday evening, and dropped anon the Thursday evening, and dropped an-chor close to a lighter that lay there with a large boat hanging by her. It was then very dark. The first person to come on board was Mason. He was followed by several men one of whom he introduced to me as his head clerk, who he said would see to the unload ing of the schooner and to the transshipmen of the goods to the ship in the Pool. He in formed me that there was a covered van waiting on ah re; and telling Wilkinson that the small arms had been disposed of, and that Mr. Mason would hand over the pro-ceeds on our calling at his office, I went with a party of my relative's men into the run, and presently had the whole of the chests in

Then, as she disappeared in the darkness, but not till then, did I draw the first easy breath I had fetched since the hour of the collision of the Laughing Mary with the iceberg.

A sob shook me: I had gone through much; many wonderful things had happened to me; I had been delivered from such perils that the nere recollection of them will stir my hair, though it is years since; my first duty I knew cabin, and kneeling with humble and grateful heart before the throne of that being to whom I owed everything.

WIEPPINS POSTSCRIPT.

Here concludes the remarkable narrative of Mr. Paul Rodney. It is to be wished that he had found the patience to tell us a little more. The circumstance of his dying in 1823 worth $31,000 leads me to suspect that his associate, Tassard, greatly exaggerated the value of the treasure. I am assured that he lived very quietly, and that the lady he married, who bore him two children, both of whom died young, was of a nun-like sim-plicity of character, and loved show and extravagance as little as her husband. Hence there is no reason to suppose that he squan-dered any portion of the fortune that had in the most extraordinary manner over heard of fallen into his hands. I have ascertained that he very substantially discharged the great obligation that his relative Mason laid him under, and that his three men received £1,000 apiece. It is possible, then, that the pirates were themselves deceived; that what pirates were memserves deceived; that what they had taken to be gold or silver ingots were not all so; or it might be that the case of jewelry was less valuable than the admir-ring and astonished eyes of a plain sailor, who admits that he had never before seen such a sight, figured it. Be this, however, as it may, it is nevertheless certain, as proved by Mr. Rodney's last will and testament, that he did uncommonly well out of his adventure on the ice.

Whatever may be thought of his story of the Frenchman's restoration to life, in other directions Mr. Rodney's accuracy seems unimpeachable. It is quite conceivable that a outly built vessel, locked up in the ice and thickly glazed, should continue in an excel-lent state of preservation for years. The confession of his superstitious fears exhibits honesty and candor. It is related that a Capt. Warren, master of an English mercha ship, found a derelict in August, 1775, that had long been ice bound, with her cabins filled with the bodies of the frozen crew. "His own sailors, however, would not suffer him to search the vessel thoroughly, through superstition, and wished to leave her immeliately." A pity they did not try their hands at thawing one of the poor fellows; the result might have kept Mr. Rodney's strange ex-

Accounts of vast bodies of ice, such as Mr. Rodney fell in with, will be found in the "South Atlantic Directory." For instance:
"Sir James C. Ross crossed Weddel's track in lat. 65 degs. S., and where he had found an open sea Ross found an ice pack of an impassable character, along which he sailed for 160 miles; and again, when only 1 deg. beyond the track of Cook, who had no occasion to enter the pack, Ross was navigating among it for fifty-six days.

"But these appear insignificant when com-Part these appear insignificant when compared with a body of ice reputed to have been passed by twenty-one ships during the months of December, 1854, and January, February, March and April, 1855, floating in the South Atlantic, from lat. 44 degs. S., long. 28 degs. W., to lat. 40 degs. S., long. 20 degs. W. Its elevation in no case exceeded 300 feet. The first account of it was received from the first account of it was received from the Great Britain, which, in December, 1854, was reported to have steamed fifty miles along the outer side of the longer shank. One ship was lost upon it; others embsyed." TE UA

The public is too well informed as to the danger from alum baking powders to need any caution against using them. It is, nevertheless, a fact that many of our most prudent and careful housekeepers are, without knowing it, using these deleterious articles daily, and from them preparing for their families tood which, were they aware of its nature, they would not offer to a beggar. Baking powders made from burnt alum cost less than four centra pruod. When these can be worked off in place of the Royal Baking Powder, and sold for forty or fifty cents a pound, there are many manufacturers and dealers sufficiently unscrupulous to do it.

when these can be worked off in place of the Royal Baking Powder, and sold for forty or fifty cents a pound, there are many manufacturers and dealers sufficiently unscrupulous to do it.

A invortic method of selling these poisonous alum baking powders is by pisoing them in an empty Royal Baking Powder can and weighing them out in small quantities when the Royal Baking Powder is called for by customera. The grocer, if questioned, claims that he buys in large packages at a lower rate, and is thus able to sell below the price of the goods in small cans. All baking powders sold in this way are entitled tesuspicion. Analyses of many of them have been made with a view to a prosecution, and in all cases they have been found largely adulterated and generally made from posionous burnt alum. This is selling counterfelt goods, and is, of course an offence against the law. We are gied to know that the Royal Baking Powder Ocmpany have taken the matter in hand, and are soting in a way that will protect the public from the swindle.

The surest protection from this fraud is for the housekeeper to buy the baking powder of the brand she wishes in the original unbroken package, looking carefully to see that the label has not been tampered with. The Royal Baking Powder Company announce, what is well known, that their goods are packed for the convenience of consumers in cans of various sizes, but are never sold in bulk, by the barrel or loose by weight or measure. The cans are securely sealed with the company's trade mark label, and the weight of each package stamped on the cover. Any baking powder being peddled out by weight under the name of Royal they denounce as bogus and to be avoided.

Consumers abould bear these facts in mind if they do not wish to have imposed upon them the poisonous alum stuff that is being profusely distributed throughout the country under the name of Boyal they denounce as the substant of the high cet test, strength and efficiency.

Queer Fits and Starts.

The fits and starts—neing these words in their literal meaning—of the nervous people often strikes the beholder as ludicrons. The nerves of heaving of such unfortunates are painfully acute, and implinged by abrupt, unexpected noises, lead them semetimes to perform antics worthy of a jumping lack. At the root of nervousness, in most instances, is non-assimilation of the food, and consequently insurrition of the nerves as of the other tissues of the body. This prolonged is, of course, productive of serious nervous disease. The remedy is Hostetter's Stomach Bitters, that invigorate the stomach and onables it to perform its functions properly. Soon after commencing a course of it. It will be found that the nerves grow more trangul by day, nightly repose becomes less interrupted, and appetite more vigorous and satisfying. These are the initial indications, followed by the complete restoration of nervous vigor. The Bitters also core fever and ague, liver complaint and constipation. Queer Fits and Starts.

D. P. STACKHOUSE Boots and Shoes.

Thanking you all for the quick response in coming in last week to see our low prices, and for many compilmentary remarks which were made on the conveniences—light and general adaptation of my store; and the best of all was the exceedingly low prices which always has been the main spring of my large business. How I have lots of HOOTS and HOURS yet. Thirty Thousand Dollars worth of HOOTS and SHOES means something. I did not buy them to keep, nor to let spoil on the shelf if low prices will move them; off they go, tor I am bound to sell. If you have not been dealing with us come in and look around and get acquainted; it don't matter whether you purchase or not, we will try and use you well.
