Condition of Business. There does not seem to be any reason the business situation to continue to bad; and in fact it is not clear that it bad. The railroads in May are said to have had larger earnings than in May of het year, and they ought to be a fair to the business condition. It is also a fact that a great many towns over the country are growing rapidly, and that building is being briskly carried on. We tice this phenomenon in all the larger cities in this vicinity, including conspicuously Philadelphia, Reading, Harrisburg and York. It is so in other tions, also. Our town does not show this indication, for some reason that is not entirely plain ; because in the towns in the vicinity that we speak of there does not appear to be any particular occasion for a building boom, in the increase of manufactories, that are usually supposed to be needed to invite population and demand house structure. It seems, in Reading, to be a simple expansion of a too tightly ssed population that had struggled to exist in narrow quarters during years of manufacturing depression, and has taken the first season of sunshine to shake itself; which has prompted speculation and the extension of horse car lines to distant sections and multiplication of cheap lots and the production of cheap es. Lancaster has never been under such pressure and consesequently feels no such expansion. If this is not a theory that will partly account for its backwardness in the general movement of its sister cities, we do not know another to substitute for it, in addition to the one that is patently responsible ; namely, the lack of complete local railroad facilities to reach every section of the rich country that is naturally trib.

William II to His Army. It will surprise many who read the first official utterance of the new German emperor to see that it deals with the army as the chief element in the citizenship of Germany. It is the address of a soldier and one who is accustomed to place the value of arms above the power of thought. The military traditions of his ancestors are invoked to make his men rally about him as their leader in the field. There seems to be but little thought of the victories of peace.

ntary to the trade of this city.

Yet Germany has not been backward in the arts of civilization. Her philosophers, her schools and her artizans are most in Europe, and of these more than on her armies she should be resting. It is not a cheering sign to see William II. place his army in the first place in his affections. Two weeks ago his father. who was an older and abler soldier, said " One must get to be much loved by the German nation to be able to give it the peace which is due to it." Contrast this statesmanlike sentence with the following from the new emperor : " Thus we balong to each other-I and the army. Thus we were born for one another, and we will stand together in an indissoluble bond, in peace or storm, as God may will it."

Perhaps Americans are not able to properly appreciate the situation in Germany, for to us armies are only possibili-ties. But it must be confessed that the peace of Europe would have been more stable under the middle-aged and battlescarred father than under the untried and impetuous son.

What the Autopsy Shows. The autopsy upon the remains of the German emperor discloses the fact that his disease was cancer. The New York World has a dispatch which declares that the autopsy was ordered by the ruling peror, against the will of his mother and that the consequence of showing that his father was afflicted with an incurable disease may result in the avoiding of his father's acts as emperor, because the German contitution renders any one ineligible to the supreme rulership who is afflicted with incurable disease. This is a sample of the nonsense of so much that is called news; the dead emperor's widow may have been reasonably unwilling to have his body mutilated; most widows would have a like feeling; but it is very silly to suggest that the discovery of an incurable malady in a dead emperor existing at the time of his accession, would invalidate his acts. There might be a wonderful upsetting of things in the German empire if this was the law. The ruling emperor for instance has been all his life afflicted with a disease of the head which is expected finally to kill him. Probably the majority, certainly very many men, die of disease which an autopsy would show to have existed for

It may be that the late emperor's phyicians pretended to have greater doubt as to his disease than they really had, owing to the prohibition of the German contitution. It seems unlikely that physiclans of renown would be really so incapable of correct diagnosis as the discovery of the autopsy would seem to show that they were. It has often been said that the English surgeon was put in charge of the case because he was ready to deny that the disease was certainly incurable. But this shows the folly of the restriction in the Prussian constitution. No heir to the throne who is of sound mind should be excluded from it by its provisions. The incurability of man's physical maladies is too doubtful always to be wisely m ide into such a bar.

A Summer Trip. The indications are that the hot weather has come to stay and soon will set in the exodus from the cities to the sande and mountain. It is not easy to why Lancastrians should desire to nd the summer away from home, aless to gratify the human disposition for a change of scene. This town and county puts on an extra suit of loveliness in the summer time. It is true there are days too hot almost for endurance, but these are rare; and the nights are almost universally cool.

If the seaside or mountain sojourner will cast up accounts at the end of his trip, he will find how little is the advantage of going away in hot weather. He will reflect upon the heat of the railroad cars in traveling, the torrid reflection of the sun upon the burning sands of the seashore, the stuffy little rooms lacking in cheerfulness, the necessity of being dressed within an inch of one's life at all the hotel meals, and finally the extravagant prices of living in these summer hotels. These reflections will cause him to wonder whether the game is worth the candle.

For Lancastrians who are unacquainted with the glorious county in which we live, it would be well to take a summer trip by a long easy drive through its broad domains. There are well kept hotels scattered near enough to each other to make the journey quite delight ful, and one could drive in the early morning and when the sun goes down, taking the middle of the day for rest and refreshment. Such a summer vacation would not only be enjoyable, but would have value in making us better acquainted with the resources of our rich county, and with the people who husband

The Return of Corbin.

President Corbin, of the Reading rail. road, has returned from Europe, but has no information for the reporters. He does not even have an opinion of the European financial situation generally, having been wholly engrossed with Reading matters. And it is true that these are weighty enough to engross one man's attention.

Mr. Corbin reaches home just in time to hear the committee of the Reading miners, who negotiated their resumption of mining with him in the spring, declare that he has failed to observe the stipulations of the agreement. They make no recommendation, merely suggesting that it is for the miners themselves to decide whether they will submit. The inference is that at present it is deemed advisable to do so; but it will not be safe to conclude that they will not kick at a more opportune moment. People who are dealing with organized masses of men can seldom safely fail to keep faith with them. A very conspicuous feature of Mr. Corbin's dealings with his employes is the readi ness with which he breaks his engagements with them; a propensity which does not promise him long-continued harmonious and prosperous relations

An Annual Contest. The iron workers and their employers at Pittsburg, are said to be ready to agree to disagree upon the scale of wages to go in force for another year, commencing July 1. The employers ask a reduction of fifty cents a ton for puddling, and less rates for finishing the smaller sizes of iron. This contest comes annually at this time, which is a very suitable season of the year for it, as it is hard on both men and employers to make iron in the heat of the summer season. It often happens that the mills stop for several weeks or months pending the settlement of the wages dispute, and it is likely to so happen this year, there being small profit to the mills in present prices. The workmen, realizing the situation. boldly proposed to their employers to shut the works down for three months ; to which the latter are said to have as sented provide I the workmen would agree not to work for any of their competitors. It is largely a game of bluff on both sides that is played, and the result will be determined as usual by the business situa-

A Forced Tribute.

The disgruntled New York Sun which stabbed Hancock in 1880, ran the Butler side show in 1884 in the interest of Blaine, and is now booming Thurman and ignoring Cleveland, is forced to this tribute of admiration for the Democratic chief magistrate:

Verily, verily, in our day no politician has been observed who could compare in all the deep arts of management and of mastery with Grov r Cleveland. And what is most to be noted in this whole strange, eventful history is that he has employed none of the ordinary devices of ployed none of the ordinary devices of popularity, none of the smiles, the favors and the flatteries of commonplace politics. On the contrary, his work has been done by methods so intellectual, so shrewd, so subtle and so forcible that all opposition has been extinguished and submission and has been extinguished and submission and obedience rendered universal.

It is a little curious to know how Dana's paper will stand in this campaign. It makes no difference whether it supports the Democracy or opposes it, its influence in the Democratic camp is gone.

THE biography of Cleveland and Thurman will be ready for the public between July 1 and July 15. It will be published by the Hubbard Brothers, and will be written and edited by W. U. Hensel, esq, of this city. No man in the country probably possesses a richer equipment for doing this important work than Mr. Hensel. For fitteen years past he has been in public life and a powerful factor therein. As one of the editors of this journal he made his impress upon the political affairs of his time, and his platform speeches throughout the country have made his name synonymous with elequence. He had been for five years chali man of the Democratic state committee of Pennsylvania; a delegate to nearly all the Democratic conventions since 1877 chairman of the state convention of 1888; delegate to St. Louis, and campaign biographer of Mr. Hendricks in 1884 Mr. Hen. sel's warm personal intimacy with the president and with Mr. Thurman make him all the better fortified for writing a biography of permanent literary merit. THE seaside hotel-keeper is enterprising. very enterprising. The sea serpent is not disporting slong the Atlantic coast this season. A new scheme has been evolved to attract visitors, and it is one that is intended to convince people of the possibility that a handful of matter valuable enough to pay for their summer's leisure may float to them. It is widely published that a young man helical Zacharlah T. Wiley, while walking on the beach at Marbiehead Neck, discovered a peculiar substance floating in the see. He succeeded in bringing it ashore and brought it to Lynn, Mass., where it was discovered to be gonuine ambergris. The lump weighed 14% pounds and at the present market quotations is valued at $3,200. THE completion of the Clay street sower will confer a boon on a long suffering por-tion of this city. It is to be hoped that no delay will be permitted in the immediate use of it. The contractor, Mr. Bernard E. Malone, has finished the work in first-class style and there should be no hesitancy in its acceptance by councils.

THE Philadelphia Times makes a forcible point for the appriority of American citizenship in the quiet acquisseence of the more than four thousand saloon keepers and their assistants in the Quaker city to the decree of the law that required them to close their saloons and seek another means of livelihood. Had such a law been promulgated in Berlin or in Paris, anarchy would have followed. But American citizenship is imbued with the thought that the citizen makes the laws, and if they are obnoxious, they may be repealed by the votes of himself and his fellows. It is this that keeps him patient under what seems injustice and makes him the peer of Ir looks as though Mr. Cleveland might be called upon to knock out Mr. Harrison, of Indiana, the same who was recently lefeated for re-election to the Senate.

THE Pennsylvania Republicans are pre sented in a quite humiliating position at Chicago. They have no headquarters and are scattered over the city with no positive influence upon anything. It was given out that Mayor Fitler, of Philadelphis, was to have the support of the Keystone delegation. How much oredence is to be placed in this may be seen from the manner in which Quay is supporting Sherman and Bayne is backing up the movement for Harrison. Fitter is not even big enough to old a considerable vote in his own s'ate for the first ballot. He is just about large enough to permit a gang of political heelers to bide a few minutes behind him.

Ir Harrison should be nominated, his platform would probably be: "I am the son of my father."

Andrew Carneous was interviewed at York, Eng., on Sunday. He said that Mr. Blaine could be president any day if he liked. Andrew is a Republicae, and like all capitalists is for the party which is for.
