Points of Mr. Litchman's address. He advanced the usual arguments of the Knights of Labor.

Mr. Litchman went on at some length to show that many of the labor troubles were caused by under consumption and not by over production.

After presenting statistics to show that the factory hands in Massachusetts and Rhode Island did not earn enough to keep their families, and that a mine boss in Pennsylvania received but $1.25 per day for his dangerous work.

Mr. Litchman argued against strikes, and said that the men who recommend them are the worst foes of labor.
