

HAND TO HAND.

By REBECCA HARDING DAVIS.

The managing editor's patience was almost exhausted. "Positively, Maj. Standish, I don't see that we can find any room for anything of yours in the Camera this week. Or any week for that matter. I wish to see you, my dear boy, at the office at the head of 'revises' waiting upon his desk. He did not take them out, however, but stood outside respectfully, for he was a young fellow, and Standish, though a notorious bore, was old and white headed."

"You here again, Standish!"

"Ah, Mr. McMurray! A delightful morning, sir!" The major beamed on him effulgent. "I have been thinking, the managing editor, both driving their pens furiously at McMurray's appearance, winked at each other. The steady major, with his grand brawny build, his imperturbable equanimity and his ready wit, was the one who first led them out every month for me to come to their help. But I like to see the old Camera succeed, that's the truth."

"The Camera is under obligation to you," said Standish. "I'll be glad to build it up. I've a pride-Philadelphia enterprise, sir-a pride in it," backing to the door. "What I have here, sir," touching his forehead, "was meant for making not a name, but a fortune. By the way, I have your little thing of mine in the Westminster."

"No, nor nobody else," savagely. "Ah, you don't take the quarters? I'll send it to you, Mr. McMurray, good morning." "Keep that line and brought out of the office, Mr. Standish," said McMurray in his coldest, liveliest tones; for when other men have raised his sense of duty, his quietest. He smoothed his face before going back into office. Young John Proctor was there, the clergyman to whom McMurray's church, through his influence, had just given a call. He had just come from the depot after two years' absence in the west, and McMurray was striving to do him honor and his hard, ungenial way. Proctor had been a sort of ward of his, and it was withered about in the office that McMurray would be glad to have him now for a son-in-law. This church was his idol, and to see his only child the wife of one of its ministers was, in his opinion, to increase her in the early gates of salvation while yet alive. "The office" felt as if the delicate, bright haired little bliss would be thrown away on Proctor. "These penniless preachers know how to feather their nests," Stinger had said but a few minutes before.

Mr. McMurray could not forget Standish when he went back to his office. "Lazy old Bohemian!" he growled. "If you want the most respectable view of Mr. Proctor, always in front for them in an old man who lives by his wits."

Under the name of 'What a prince the major and Madeline made of him-sitting all week to compose the Saturday's round chicken-crabapple tart! Proctor had never known father or mother; his idea of love or a home were all drawn from poor Standish and his crazy megalomania. "The boy is instinct in him just now that he actually stood breathless when anybody resembling the major came in sight. If the old man should not recognize him, or should meet him with a friendly smile, he would be soothed by the people, why, then, good-by to that old boyhood, so horribly dear and disreputable!"

Now the major was in a restaurant a few doors down the street. "Try an advertisement in the Camera," Standish had said to the bookkeeper. "I swear it will pay you like -like!" His talk halted; the ideas seemed to stagger through his brain. "You've had a drop too much, Standish," said Sam. "No, I've had to stop drinking. You can't get a glass of champagne fit for a gentleman in this scoured town. But about the advertisement?" (The Camera paid him a small percentage on this sort of business, and a few cents now would buy him his dinner.)

The major looked on the glass counter for a moment. It was two days since he had tasted food. The steam of savory dishes below was too much for him. A collapsed stomach in a powerful frame like his is a dangerous condition. He had a man's plan. He looked for Sam. The fellow would give him his dinner if he asked it, he knew. He gathered himself up with an effort. "I'd sell, but I can't beg," he said, silently. He nodded affably to Sam, and filled to the brim a parrot as he went. His high forehead usually florid face, had turned cold and blue under the mustache and whiskers, but he carried himself bravely.

At His Post Day and Night. The vigilant imp, indignation, goes with his many-lashed eyes. Each lash is a diabolic symptom. No comfort in eating, misery afterwards, little or broken rest at night, sensations of the nightmarish during intervals of sleep, an uprising, unrefreshed and without appetite, sleepiness and yawning during the day, nervousness and loss of temper, even monomania in extreme cases, these are the signs of indigestion. The stomach, after a course of this medicine is relieved, acute or chronic. Prompt relief follows the first administration. The truth of this statement, backed up by the testimony of the American people. So are others, viz: that it is a safe, effective and never an agent and bilious remittent, and relieves nervousness, biliousness, constipation, and kidney and bladder troubles.

"I was poisoned by poison ivy, and led to go till the poison got into my blood, when I was obliged to give up my work, and was confined to my house for two months. I had sores and scales on me. FROM HEAD TO FEET. My finger nails came off, and my hair and whiskers came out. I had two physicians, but did not seem to get much better. Then I saw Hood's Sarsaparilla advertised and bought a bottle. It helped me so much that I continued taking it till I had used three bottles, when I was cured.
