LOST $22,000 AT FARO.

A Western "Plunger" Drops That Sum in John Daly's Long Branch House.

Edward Walcott, a Denver lawyer and politician, went to Long Branch on Saturday and lost $22,000 in John Daly's club-house. Walcott expects to be the next United [illegible] from Colorado. He is said to be a [illegible] player, and a heavy loser, while at Long Branch. A well-known Western sport said that he saw Walcott at the Branch on Saturday, but that he did not mention anything about having dropped the amount of money. He had no doubt he did lose the money, but Walcott was not a [illegible] gambler, was open to few [illegible] and that cry about [illegible] won't [illegible] people until he parts with every cent of the money with him.

"Why," continued the Westerner, "I saw Walcott lose $25,000 on a pool-[illegible] game at Nashville, Tenn., five years ago. He has gambled very little those last five years, but when he does take a notion to handle the cards he plunges all in his possession and rarely comes out loser. I have never seen a lucky card player, and when he once gets interested in a game either he or the banker has to be cleaned out, for he will continue playing for days and nights, and no one is able to break him off."

A dealer in one of the fancy tables down town said of Walcott's loss, no doubt, lost the $22,000. I have dealt over tables where he was sitting and have seen mostly every chip in the bank stacked up before him, and he would cash them when everyone else [illegible] broke, and go home as unconcerned as though [illegible] from a mercury's top. I believe he went to Washington the early part of last winter to get acquainted with the politicians, expecting to be sent to the Senate this coming election, and while there got into the business of lobbying, at which he is reported to have made piles of money. [illegible] that he lost at Jack Daly's on Saturday, I believe, was some of the loose change a new railway company in Texas had to scatter among the Capital City politicians.

A Hungarian wedding was celebrated at Milnesville, a small mining village near Hazleton, on Sunday and resulted in a riot. In the evening two warring factions of the nationality, after imbibing large quantities of [illegible] became [illegible] quarrelsome and [illegible] a fight, which ended in the stabbing of eight of their number, two of whom, it is thought, are fatally injured. The [illegible] of the place were so terrorized [illegible] help to stop the fight. No arrests have been made.
