A Lancaster County Woman Gives Her Intended Husbase the sup.
The morning papers have the following dispatch, which was dated Potistown:
"John Hoffman, a well-to-do saddler tiving at Swamp, came to Potistown this morning, where he met Mrs. Amanda Russell, a buxon woman wides of County Ille morning, where he met Mrs. Amanda Russell, a buxom young widow of Quarryville, Lancester county, with whom he had made arrangements to be married this evening in Reading. Hoffman upon arriving in town immediately went to the National Iron bank and drew a sufficient amount of money to defray the expenses of a wedding trip. He left his lady in company with Mr. J. H. Collina, of this borough, who was to be the groomsman on the secasion, at one of the leading hotels while he went to procure his wedding outfit, but upon his return he found that Mrs. Russell and Collina had eloced on the 8:30 train and Collins had sloved on the 8:30 train north, whereupon he sat down and west like a child."

Mrs Russell's maiden rame was Stockur and she halls from the lower part of the county. She was married to a man named Russell who was much older than herself and he died in a soldier's home. Of late she had been living in Colerain township, a couple of miles from Quarryville. She i about 35 years of age and is quite lively. are not surprised at the part this affair.

ALMOST A DRUWNING.

Young Man's Life Baved by His Three Wednesday afternoon a party of young men went out to the Concestogs to swim and they entered the stream in Ranck's mendow. There was a boat at the place and they took it out in the creek to dive from. In the party was Edward Flory, son of Dallas Flory, grocer of West Chestnut street. This young man was not much of a swimmer, but he managed to get cut to the middle the stream. Suddenly his friends were startled by his cries for help and they noticed that he was sinking. Christ Bruder was the first person to reach him and he caught him by the bair, which however Flory struggled he clutched Bruder, who was afraid that he might be drawn under the water also, Arthur Pringle another of the party, dived from the boat toally and caught Flory under the arms He held him until Bruder and Harry Strine came to his assistance, and the three managed to get him to the shore. Flory sunk several times while in the stream and would have perished in a short time, When taken from the water he was uncon olous, but soon recovered.

The Vietle Unknown. Jeremish Habn, of Manheim, who went to Gap station on Wednesday morning to inquire about the man killed there, who it was supposed was his son, returned home on Wednesday evening. The body was not exhumed because after seeing the parties who handled it and receiving from them a description of the man killed, he was positive it was not his son.

Mrs. Franklin A. Kupp, of Reading, hrs an idea that the body is that of her son George A. Hiller, who left his home two weeks ago in search of work. The descrip tion of the Gap man tallies with that of Hiller, and a member of the family went to Gap to-day to get a correct description of the man. The initials on the Gap man's arm are not those of Hiller. It is likely that many missing men will be reported on secount of this secident
