" ENDURR." "ENDURE."

Whatever lacks purpose is evil, a pool without pebbles breeds sitme:

Not any one step hath chance fashloned on the infinite stairway of time;

Nor ever came good without labor in totl, or in science or art;

it must be wrought out through the muscles, bern out of the soul and the heart.

Way plough in the stabble with ploughshares why, winnow the chaff from the grain?

Ah, since all of His gif's must be totled for, since ruth is not born without pain?

He giveth not to the unworthy, the weak or the foolish in deeds;

Who giveth but chaff at the reed-time shall cap but a harvest of weeds

As the pyramid builded of vapor is blown by His whirlwinds to nought.
So the song without truth is forgotten; His poem is man to man's thought.

poem is man to man's thought.

Whatever is strong with a jurpose, in humbleness woven, soul-pure, is known to the Master of Singers. He toucheth it saying, "Endure."

—Charles J. O'Mally in the Boston Pilot.

A Pittaburg physician, named Cooper, has just applied for a patent on a process to preserve human bodies by compression. By a curious combination of steel presess. and hot rollers be excludes all the moleture and reduces a full grown body to a very small size 12 by 15 inches, rendering it as hard and imperishable as marble. He has made several experiments with perfect success. The doctor and others who have investigated the process think it will supersede cremation, as bodies thus preserved are not only not offensive, but can be made to assume various ornamental shapes and be kept in the paritors or elsewhere as constant reminders of the departed. The doctor has on his centre table the remains of a child pressed into the form of a cross. It resembles the purest marble, is highly ornamental, and is perfectly odoriess. The inventor proposes to place a large number of specimens on exhibition in a few days. A company will be formed to push the invention. ture and reduces a full grown body to a

How the Solomon Islanders Make Fire.

From the Westminster Review.

The native method of producing fire is by the friction of a small, dry, pointed wooden stick on the smooth surface of another piece of wood, " which friction, in some three or four minutes, produces smoke, and finally a fine powder, which has been collecting in the small hole at the end of the groove, (made by the rubbing of the stick,) begins to smolder. After being carefully nursed by the breath of the operator the tiny flame is transferred to a piece of touchwood, and the object is obtained." This primitive method is, however, fant giving way and dying out owing to the competition of lucifer matches which the traders now supply. Torches are used by the natives of Bougain-Torches are used by the natives of Bougain-ville straits during their fishing excursions at night and during festivals. They are made of a rosin which seems to be abundant, which has a powerful odor, and which is used by simply wrapping it compactly, after it has been powdered, in a paim leat, which, although outside the rosin, answers the purpose of a wick.
