Transit. Mr. Blaine asserts that trusts are largely private affairs. We have been under the impression that they are largely matters of public concern, but it is just possible that this may all be a mistake.

Even Mr. Blaine will not deny that there can be no right to one man of fortune to buy and hold all the wheat in the market in order that the price might be forced up.

There are 25,000 Democrats in marching clubs in Philadelphia. As this is nearly one-third of the Democratic vote in Philadelphia, it augurs well for party activity there.

The detective who furnishes the highly interesting account of the Indiana White Caps is probably telling the truth in all essential points, though the account of his capture and imprisonment is rather overdone.

LET THE READER reflect the curious and uncertain state of things on the Republican side of this campaign.

Speaker Carlisle says he is ready to meet Mr. Blaine in a joint debate on the tariff. Now let us see whether that price of wire-pullers and dealer in glittering generalities will too the mark in an intellectual contest with a man who is teeming with facts in support of the Democratic position on the tariff, and who has a way of using these facts in a cumulative fashion to inspire terror in the man who derives arguments from his imagination.

It would be a cheering sight to see Speaker Carlisle lay ex-Speaker Blaine. The latter would have no chance to run to cover with the eyes of the country upon the combatants. He would be compelled to produce figures instead of fine sounding rhetoric.

He would be asked to show why he deemed it necessary to bring home with him thirty-two trunks stuffed with the products of European "pauper labor."

He would be asked to throw more light upon the question of trusts to which he thus referred soon after his recent return.

I shall not venture to say that they are altogether advantageous or disadvantageous. They are largely private affairs, with which neither President Cleveland nor any private citizen has any particular right to interfere.

He would be asked to reconcile this statement with that plank of the Republican platform which takes strong ground against trusts.

the purpose, with the high bluffs of Indian Hill overlooking the Conestoga and the surrounding country. Farther down the stream opposite the cemetery, is a site easily accessible, and good ground might be found west of the town on the Mt. Pleasant. We have plenty of beautiful scenery on the winding course of this stream, and an effort should be made to preserve a specimen of it for our own delight and that of future ages.

Yellow Jack at Jacksonville. In spite of the vigorous measures of the health officers and people of Jacksonville the fever is said to have assumed a more severe type, so there can not be much encouragement from the small number of new cases reported.

Human knowledge and skill could suggest has been done to check the plague and kill the germs. The city has been thoroughly cleansed and a close watch is kept upon all who might by any possibility spread the infection.

Canon has been fired from sunrise to sunset, and if he has not perished, the life of the wretched little fever germ must have been made quite miserable. But all these measures were directed against a comparatively mild form of the disease, for only five deaths are recorded out of thirty-three cases.

Now the authorities will have to fight fever of a more severe type and in spite of the small number of cases should redouble their vigilance, for if the more virulent form gains half the foothold that was held at first by the fever there will be little hope for Jacksonville.
