

The Daily Intelligencer.

LANCASTER, AUGUST 27, 1888. THE DAILY INTELLIGENCER publishes all the telegraphic news of the United Press up to the latest possible hour.

Several things are anxiously awaited by the best Republicans. A word from Mr. Blaine about trusts and another from General Harrison on the same matter.

Mr. Blaine about trusts and another from General Harrison on the same matter, but most of all their souls are filled with sorrow for the wretched senators who don't know what to do about the president's message.

So before the battle is fairly on, the wildest confusion reigns in the lines of the enemy, and no one knows what the morrow may bring forth.

Meanwhile the argument for lower taxes and no surplus makes steady headway in spite of the noisy, senseless cry of free trade, and an occasional flutter of the bloody shirt.

At last the plumed knight advances to defend the railroads, the Englishmen and the senators. He is an able man and makes an able defense, but fortunately for the country he says nothing to justify any real opposition to the policy of retaliation.

Mr. Blaine's fierce criticism of the treaty and of the earnest efforts of the president to secure a peaceful adjustment of this trouble have nothing to do with the case. Whether good or bad the treaty is dead, and the chief executive has demanded support in the only policy that can properly follow a failure of negotiations.

With the consistency of high tariff men, the only real jewel-like consistency to be found on earth, the most noisy opponents of Mr. Cleveland are spreading the joyful news that retaliation will suit the Canadians exactly because it will compel them to develop their internal resources.

The steady decline in tone of all but a select few of the Sunday papers is worthy of remark. Published on Saturday evening they can hardly be expected to furnish a large supply of news that has not already appeared in the Saturday evening papers, and so they endeavor to fix public interest by furnishing the lightest of magazine literature and the minor details of events of the day.

upon the people who doze over them on Sunday, not because they are very much worse than the average daily, but because on Sunday men have more time for idle and harmful gossip and thought, and on that day of all others they should have literature of a pure and elevating tone.

IN 1870 President Grant sent to Congress a message that resulted in the treaty of 1871, but the important part of that treaty has expired and we now have a similar condition to that existing when Grant appealed to Congress, though at this time the present aggravating circumstances did not exist.

LEVI P. MORTON and his partner are doubtless distressed at the aspect of Canadian affairs. Mr. Morton is believed to be still in the Canadian Pacific railway to the extent of $750,000 and his partner, Mr. Cross, is the Canadian member of the banking firm of Morton, Hills & Co.

resolution condemning Mr. Snowden was the last one read, but it is the approval of the meeting as was evidenced by the outbreak of applause that followed its reading. The resolution was as follows: Resolved, That the course of William H. Snowden in voting against the Mills bill be disapproved of and condemned.

President Cleveland's message on the fisheries question was endorsed as follows: We commend the wise, patriotic and manly stand taken by President Cleveland on the subject of Canadian fisheries.
