A LITTLE GIRL'S BEPLECTIONS

- I'm sweeter, so my mamma said,
 Then any sugar plum,
 Then dollies made of singerbreed Cook often bakes me to se;
 I'm worth a bag of yellow go.d.
 Of diamonds, or of pearls:
 I am, or so I have been told,
 The preciousest of girls:
 I am fairer than the brightest star
 To my own mamma dear.
- To my own mamma dear, Than all the lovely researe That blossom through the year No Paris dels—I s'pres it's so—

- No Paris deli-I s'pose it's soWas over n'ee as me;
 And yet-I don' e ractly know
 How quite all this can be.
 For sugar-plume are made of sweet,
 And 'sasees cakes are too;
 And bags of gold I never meet,
 Nor diamonts-now, do your
 And shining stars are made of light;
 But who can ever tell
 Of what the roses set and wh'te
 Are made I I'm very well,
 But doily must more beautiful
 And better be-she must—
 For she is made of citton woel,
 But I am made of dust.

A SUGGESTION. Let the wild red rose bloom. Though not to thes

So deiteately perfect as the white
And unwed lily dropping in the light;
Though she has known the kisses of the tee
And tells heramorous tale to passers by,
In perfumed whispers and with untaught

grace,
Still let the red rose bloom in her own place;
hhe could not be the lily should she try!

Why to the wondrous nightingale cry "Hush,"
Or bid her cease her wild, heart breaking lay
And tune her voice to imitate the way
The wippoorwill makes music, or the thrush ?
All airs of sorrow to one theme belong,
And passion is not copyrighted. Yet
Each heart writes its own music. Why not
