

The Daily Intelligencer.

LANCASTER, NOVEMBER 27, 1888.

Who Will be President.

We will know more about Mr. Harrison's views than we do now when we see whom he selects as the Pennsylvania member of his cabinet. Of course the name will be a member, and the matter of interest is as to whether Mr. Harrison will select him or permit someone else to do it for him. Mr. Quay is anxious to have the job and seemingly expects to have it; and the rank and file of the party appear to think that he commands the situation and the patronage that is to flow into Republican hands. There is hardly anyone about who does not brain under Quay. The Philadelphia delegation in the lower House of the legislature has just declared for an Allegheny chief clerk of the House, who is the foe of Quay's Allegheny antagonist, Magee. The old chief clerk, Leach, Quay's foe, is to be turned out; along with our own Cochran, whose former chief appears to claim and get his own.

But it may be that our Republican friends are over-hasty in their tumbling under the Quay blanket. If they will reflect a little, they will find that Quay was a steadfast opponent of Harrison for the nomination; and it was only after he was nominated, and when the choice was Harrison or Cleveland, that Quay turned in for Harrison. He had no place else to turn. The position of chairman which was given him, honored him. He wielded it successfully and deserves well of his party. He has no personal claim on Harrison, and he has yielded to his political candidate.

And it will be noted, too, that Mr. Harrison has a large acquaintance with the politicians of the country and that there are those in Pennsylvania who have been his original and earnest friends. Any disposition of rewards which leaves them out in the cold, supposes a state of suspended animation in Harrison, which will make his administration anyone else's than his own. If Harrison is to be president in fact, it is clear enough that Quay, Wanamaker, and that lot of trash will not sit supreme upon prostrate Pennsylvania.

And our own judgment is that this will be the future's showing. Harrison is likely to undertake, at least, to have something of his own way about things; and especially to select a cabinet to his liking. He is not a common or coarse man and is not likely to have any such about him intimately. He has culture and refinement; which his chosen associates will be likely to have, and it is hardly necessary to say that the Quay covey do not have. Mr. Harrison may or may not have fibre enough to stand up against the crowd and it may overcome and rule him; but it is safe to say that it will need to fight and conquer before it gets control; and any Republican in Pennsylvania who thinks that Harrison is a strong man, need not be in a hurry to prostrate himself before the men who have set out to take possession of him.

Powder and Matches.

A prosperous business ruined, a large family homeless and destitute, with sickness and the hand of death among them, and the father blinded. This is the work of one parlor match and one keg of powder, carelessly brought together near the Gap, on Saturday. Matches will drop on the floor, and the only way to avoid these dangers is to use matches that will only strike on the box. Powder will explode without notice, and the only way to avoid this danger is by retailing it in sealed cans. The trouble is that the tin cases in which small quantities of the best powder are now put up are so expensive that people prefer to buy powder loose as they do sugar, and occasionally a scale-pan full burns the whiskers from a careless store-keeper. There should be a legal regulation of the sale of powder compelling the use of cheap tin cans and forbidding the very dangerous practice of shaking it out of a keg over the store counter, while smoking men stand all around scattering sparks and parlor matches on the floor.

A great many gossips will have something to say about the carelessness of the unfortunate man at the Gap, but he was not a bit more careless than ninety-nine out of a hundred men in his position. Many sell parlor matches and powder over the same counter, or at least use these matches liberally in the neighborhood of the powder. It may be a very grave fault, but it is a very common one and Mr. Farmer's misfortune should not only excite pity and active sympathy but lead to precautions for the prevention of similar accidents.

Disposing of Wealth.

Isaiah V. Williamson finds that a man cannot even give five millions to the public, without being abused by those who do not get any benefit from the shower. Mr. Williamson has determined to confine his beneficence to white folks; whereupon the colored citizen, or his political leader, howls. One Purvis, a Philadelphia negro, thinks it really infamous that Mr. Williamson should make such a distinction. Purvis is evidently of those who favor the most intimate coming of the white and colored races and doubtless would maintain that the mixture is an improvement to both. Mr. Williamson does not seem to have been repaid of this in his eighty years of life; and being a white man himself, naturally prefers to confine his gift to his own race. When Mr. Purvis disposes of his accumulation, if he has made any, no one will object to his confining its benefits to colored folk.

Mr. Williamson does very well to get his beneficence on its legs before he dies. Any man who wants his money used as he directs, after he passes away, does well to execute the direction himself. It is not often that that execution succeeds in doing as they are told to do. Mr. Williamson has selected a crowd of men as trustees; and he may be able to get them fairly started in the use of the five millions he gave them, as he would have it used. His plan seems to be to provide means for the education in handicraft. He thinks that boys are not offered sufficient facilities for learning trades. It is clear that his opinion is sound. There are all open. If any boy cannot find an opportunity to learn a trade it is because there is an over-supply of it; and this trouble Mr. Williamson's plan will not correct.

The Iowa Evictions.

There is very general sympathy with the Iowa settlers who are being forced to desert their homes because the supreme court has declared that the land rightfully belongs to the Des Moines Navigation and Railroad company. Their responsibility for their misfortune is directly traceable to the reckless legislation of the Republicans in the matter of land grants to railroads and the justice of the decision of the courts under this legislation does not seem open to question.

These evictions are enforced by United States marshals, who take the precaution to go well supported and heavily armed, but so far there has been no evidence of the least necessity for this precaution, and though bitterly resentful at the treatment they have received, these American victims of a soulless absentee landlord submit peacefully to the law. Some of them have been prosperous enough to save the money needed for the purchase of their farms from the company, but by far the largest number have confidently put all their earnings into farm improvements that must now be abandoned. A very few knew of this company and its claims, but thought there was nothing in it. A great many imagined that they were quite secure against all molestation when they had secured a United States patent to their land, and now the company which has had no share in the work of reclaiming this wilderness for agriculture comes in for all the benefit of its increased value. Congress should temper this hard justice with mercy.

Forty clergymen of the Episcopal church met in Philadelphia, Monday, and discussed the obituary of the clergy. They differed politely on every point, and were divided over the question whether St. Paul was married, until a quiet divine suggested that the apostle was a widower.

John B. Doris ought to have a gold medal or two-inch Alaska diamond set in brass. John B. Doris should receive the thanks of Congress, and the careful attention of the post-office in an ode to Democracy. John B. is decidedly the greatest American in his line that has of late been found wandering on the pavements of New York city. His claim to undying glory is founded upon the following stroke of genius:

Among the Englishmen of title, who have made the greatest effort of their lives by visiting America disguised as gentlemen, there has of late appeared a certain Marquis of Queensbury. He has so far failed to announce exactly which American heiress he is disposed to marry, and take home to his ancestral halls for the rebuilding of the tower. He is simply hanging around festive gatherings in the metropolis and assumes the air of a sport, though he looks hungry and unhappy. His sporting proclivities may only be cultivated with a sense of fitness to his title, which should make him the prince of bruisers, but at any rate he appears to seek this kind of notoriety, and that is his only excuse. Mr. Doris is a circus man, and when six pedestrians started on a grand tramp in Madison Square Garden on Monday night he fixed his eyes upon their sterner with a bias of fine artistic frenzy. The sterner were none other than the mighty marquis, and his gaudy but dignified condescension drew around him admiring hosts of the gilded youth of America. The circus man advanced and shook the right hand of nobility, "while all the world wondered." Then he said:

"My Lord, I will pay you $2,000 week to come to the circus, eight nights a week, sit in a chair for three hours a day. On a week, I mean it. I am in the circus business, and it's a straight offer. I'll draw up the contract right away, and—"

"Do you mean to insult me, sir?" thundered the noble Englishman.

"Not at all," replied the circus man; "but I thought as you had opened this snow for nothing you might want to—"

We repeat, let all honors be heaped upon Doris, and let there be created for him a national office of "queller of imported nobility."

The Nineteenth Century for November publishes a document that Science does not hesitate to say "will rank as one of the most important and significant of modern times." This is very extravagant language, as the address referred to is nothing more than a collection of eight or nine hundred of the most influential men and women of Great Britain, against the prevailing system of examinations. The document records the "strong protest of the signers against the dangerous mental pressure, and misdirection of energies, which are to be found alike in nearly all parts of our educational system. Alike in public elementary schools, in schools of all grades and for all classes, and at the universities, the same dangers are too often showing themselves under different forms. Children are treated by a public department, by managers and schoolmasters, by parents, by the system of the middle and richer classes are often trained for scholarships with as little regard for the future as two-year old horses are trained for races; and young men of real capability at the universities are led to believe that the main purpose of education is to enable them to secure a money prize, or take some distinguished place in an examination. We protest most emphatically against such a misdirection of education, and against the evils which necessarily arise from it."

The physical, intellectual and moral evils resulting from this examination abuse are then indicated, and the protest is followed by pointed comments by learned men. Professor Max Muller, who many years ago favored civil service examinations is now vigorous in his objections to their abuse, and Frederic Harrison says: "I do not deny that examination has its uses. I say that it is a good servant, but a bad master; and like good servants turned bad masters, it is now bullying, spoiling and humiliating education."

where the land has been surveyed and quarter-sectioned for many years.

A DISPATCH from Cincinnati to the New York Star removes all doubt as to the real cause of President Cleveland's defeat in the late election. It gives the vote of Ohio as follows: "Total vote, 811,911. A. J. Mattox leads the Republican list with 416,004. Irving Dumas heads the Democrats with 391,453." Republican dollars did it.

Among the various speculations of what might have been a curious specimen is furnished by the Washington correspondent of the Pittsburg Post, who represents that the territories qualified for statehood are simply wild on the subject, and would have given their electoral votes to the Democratic party if the House had consented to admit them before the election. In the past fourteen years Montana has only twice gone Republican, and there does appear to be good reason for the belief that a Democratic move for her statehood would win her firmly to the party. The territories now clamoring most loudly to admit them before the election, Montana, Washington and New Mexico, and if the House passes the required bill to make them states, the Senate can hardly object to the later and oppose it without losing Republican prestige in the Northwest. Now, there is really very little to be gained, because the people of the North-west territories now feel assured that they will be in the states in a few months at any rate, and are hardly likely to go wild with gratitude to the Democratic party for hastening their admission to statehood. The claims of the territories should be considered at once, because they will be sure of more impartial treatment than can be expected of a Congress thoroughly Republican. No doubt the president will make this an important topic in his message next week.

PERSONAL.

J. H. CRAIG, of Iowa City, is believed to be the largest man in the world. He is 52 years old, 6 feet 7 inches in height, and weighs now 792 pounds. He has weighed 831 pounds, but uses tobacco to keep his weight below 800.

Wm. W. MORRISON, of Pittsburg, will succeed Samuel L. Leach, of Nebraska, as chief clerk of the House of Representatives. At the caucus of the Philadelphia members of the legislature his nomination was agreed to. C. F. Ellis withdrew from the contest before the caucus met. Quay recently had a fight with Leach, but the fight was now for the "boots" will not be broken in January. Morrison was journal clerk of the last House. Here is the balance of the late Speaker, Henry Phillips, Philadelphia; resident clerk, Charles E. Voorhees, Dauphin; reading clerk, Harry Huhn, Philadelphia.

Hon. J. SMITH FURLEY, president judge of the Chester county court, died Monday morning in West Chester. On Saturday morning Judge Furley was taken ill suddenly with a severe attack of cholera and did not rally. Overwork was probably the cause of the attack. Judge Furley was born in Chester county September 5, 1828. He studied law in York, and upon being admitted to the bar opened an office in West Chester. From 1849 to 1855 he was district attorney, and in February, 1870, Governor Hoyt appointed him president judge of the Chester county court. The people confirmed the appointment at the polls the next fall. In addition to his judicial duties he published a number of historical books and papers.

Rev. Wm. W. REED, of Danvers, formerly general Harrison's pastor at Indianapolis, once went on a hunting trip with one of his prominent parishioners, possibly General Harrison, and he was sitting at the happy hunting grounds, Mr. Reed was dismayed to find that he had brought with him a quantity of cartridges only half loaded, containing powder instead of shot. An ingenious idea struck him. He proposed to his comrade that they should go to their game, which was ducks in a flock, and that they divide the spoils equally. His unsuspecting partner assented to the proposal, and Mr. Reed did not return with an empty game bag. The trick finally came to the ears of his friend, but he was so much amazed at the deception that had been practiced on him, and would never go hunting with a conscientious pastor again.

Very much of human misery and distress is caused by sickness. The true method is to prevent sickness, which can be safely and cheaply accomplished by the use of Koko Soap. It costs only 25 cents.

WANAMAKER'S

Philadelphia, Tuesday, Nov. 27, 1888. Closed Thanksgiving Day.

Five more big surprises. The manufacturer's way of getting out. Brand new this morning.

- 1-Real Seal Skin Flush Jackets in the variety of styles, lined throughout, worth from $5 to $25; our price $3 to $10.
- 2-Real Seal Skin Flush Wraps, handsome, lined, with fur, price $20; same as $35; just what they've been seeking for.
- 3-Real Seal Skin Flush Wraps, elegantly trimmed, price $15; same as $25; our price $10 to $15.
- 4-A fresh invoice of those wonderful Rippled newmarkets, with angel sleeves and fur-trimmed ornaments; identical with the good at $1; our price 60c to 80c.
- 5-Beautiful Ulsters and Capes, latest styles and materials, and in all styles, price $15 to $25; our price $10 to $15.

Full assortment in colors and sizes. But first choice is worth being quick for.

As unlikely a thing as we've done in Dress Goods this season was to give 65 cent colored heavy weight French Cashmere for 50 cents.

Fine wool, spun and woven and dyed by one of the most famous Cashmere makers of the world. Every yard we know of anywhere at the price is now on our counters. Every yard you're likely to see this season at 50 cents is under our roof. The end is in sight. 39 inches (the trade and most stores call them 40), and just the weight, dye, and finish you want. In more than fifty shades. We used to get 75 cents for precisely the same Cashmères.

There's a special bargain flavor to everything in these lots:

- 100 Caps for Infants and Children, recommended, no matter how you shall buy, $20, 50c, 75c, and $1 each; several heavy coats for infants of 3 and 4 years, made of plush and novel cloth, for $1.50, $2.00, and $3; several heavy coats for Misses and Children, $1.50, $2.00, and $3; several heavy coats for Ladies, $2.00, $3.00, and $4.00; several heavy coats for Men, $3.00, $4.00, and $5.00; several heavy coats for Boys, $1.50, $2.00, and $3.00; several heavy coats for Girls, $1.50, $2.00, and $3.00.

Every price right; so are shapes and quality.

What a reminder yesterday was of Storm Coats! It's in the range of possibilities that to-day will be another. We have the genuine Coats of rubber vulcanized by a new process, making them much more durable than of old. Fully guaranteed not to slip in the seams. If one does, you get a new one. Made by Charles Macintosh & Co., with Byers' patented ventilation. $8.50 to $25. With the House and Smoking Coats, Dressing Gowns, Bath Wraps, etc.

Direct from the best maker in Stuttgart, Germany, we have received some Women's and Children's "Union Garments"; that is, vest and drawers in one piece. They are made from undyed wool, called by some "normal," by others "sanitary." They come in white or gray, $1.75 for children's, $4.75 for women's.

Men's Night Shirts in the same qualities, $4.

When you see the texture the price will surprise you. Some of the French Tablecloths have about as much art and elegance as ever gets into such goods. Mommie weave and the silvery glisten of the finest flax. Hemstitched, and hand-drawn into pleasing patterns of fancy open work. Prices are by sets—Napkins included:

- 24x36 yards $37
- 24x36 yards $40
- 24x36 yards $45

Irish Linen, hemstitched and fancy open work, $22.50 to $43 a set.

German Sets, hemstitched, and with fancy sewing. Very fine Silesian and Dresden sets, $15.50 to $44.

Scotch sets, 2 1/2 x 2 yards, with 5/8 Napkins, $3.75 to $5.50; 2x3 yards, $6 to $12.

Knotted Fringe Cloths, two rows of open work, Doyleys to match, $5 a set; extra fine, up to 8-14 size, and $15.50 price.

Bleached Doyleys, $1 a doz. They would be good value at $1.25. Same, red borders, 75c, $1, and $1.65. Extra, 5/8, red borders, fringed, $2.50. By rights should be $4.

That's a peep at one corner of the Linens. We are doing just as remarkable things in every sort—Handkerchiefs to Sheets.
