LANCASTER, DECEMBER 3, 1893.

The Beasts.

It is announced by Mr. Blaine's friends that he will take the secretaryship of state if Mr. Harrison offers it to him. They do not say that he has done so; and it seems to be generally suspected that he will not do so. Under this situation, it is notable that Mr. Blaine's willingness to take what is not likely to be offered him, is announced; as one would not think, on first impression, that Blaine would care to have it known that he had been kicked. It looks as though he was determined to increase Mr. Harrison's difficulty in disposing of him. He is bound to have him face the responsibility of rejecting his party's leader, who signifies his willingness to go into his cabinet. It shows that Blaine is belligerent; and that he is not going to be cut down without showing his teeth. He may hope that he can force Harrison to appoint him; or he may care less to go into the cabinet than to get all the advantage that will come from being cast out. He is playing for position. He says to Harrison, "reject if you dare the leader of your party who offers you his assistance." If he is taken, he will run the administration, or ruin it; and will step out in time, in the latter case, to save himself from damage. If he is left, he will run the party from the outside and make Harrison dance to his music or make his opposition. He is bound to administer the party or fight.

And other fellows have this ambition; beside Harrison, whom his party is supposed to have elected to administer affairs. It has come to pass that a president has more trouble in ruling his party than in ruling the country, and it takes a good, strong man to make any headway at the work; especially in the Republican party, which has long been dominated by a set of sharks, who play politics for its profit and consider themselves the legitimate beneficiaries of all its products; and if it is not accorded them peacefully they propose to take it forcibly. They have no idea of being left out of the feast while they have fangs and claws with which to fight.

And Mr. Harrison is going to have a lively time with all this ravenous and selfish crowd, against whom it is his fate to stand or fall. The two beasts particularly claiming his attention now, in the matter of election for secretary of state, are Blaine and Sherman. They are natural antagonists, being the two Republican leaders of chief note and each richly endowed with the disposition to take care of himself. At Chicago Blaine would not permit Sherman's nomination, and Sherman, leading whom was Quay, would not permit Blaine's. Both lost the stake; but Sherman, through Quay, was quickest in renewing his hold upon the situation. Quay became the Republican chairman, with nothing to lose by defeat and with a heavy hand upon the administration to gain by success. It was an alert and clever movement; and sealed in the saddle he made the mare go with the abundant money which the manufacturers' fears caused them to pour into his lap.

He won; and achieved the first place in power in the Republican administration. He is against Blaine and for Sherman, his Chicago candidate; for whom Harrison is said to have a friendly feeling, which he does not have for Blaine; who also he fears to call about him lest he be said to be his master. It looks very much as though Blaine would be left to do his scheming outside the cabinet.

And it will be interesting to note during the coming years the movements and the slawings in the Kilkenny cat fight that they surely have in store for the Republican party under its feline leaders.

Provincial Mr. Harrison.

A former law partner and a life-long friend of General Harrison, Mr. Wm. P. Fishback, has published a careful essay on the character of the president-elect written with an evident effort to make the picture as flattering as truth will permit. He intimates that with regard to civil service reform Gen. Harrison "has the good lawyer's instinctive respect for the law" and will enforce whatever laws exist in letter and spirit, but "will recognize the fact that the will of the people as expressed through their senators and representatives in Congress is the directing force in all matters of public policy." This is a fine beating of the devil around the bush, but it may be taken to mean that General Harrison is quite sharp enough to get around the legal barrier. It may easily be reasoned that if Republican senators and representatives chose to regard a clean sweep of all offices as the proper policy, the laws governing civil service can be allowed to sleep.

"He is," says Mr. Fishback of Mr. Harrison, "a strong partisan, and has always been so since he began to vote the Republican ticket in 1850. From that time to the present he has held a brief for his party, and has served it with the unwavering fidelity which has always characterized his devotion to a client who committed his life or fortune to his hands." "At its worst he has always believed that Republicanism is better than Democracy at its best." Mr. Fishback plainly intimates his displeasure at the general's remarks that the advocates of tariff reform are "students of maxims and not of markets." He says that this lowered his respect and suggested provinciality.

When Mr. Harrison has been a year in office everybody will know all about his character from his toes up, but from all the portraits drawn by friends and enemies we can only guess that there is nothing very strong about the man unless stubborn willfulness is counted strength. His greatest weakness seems to be his narrow partisanship which may make him the unconscious tool of the worst elements of his party.

The President Firm.

The president maintains, as of course he was expected to do, in his last message to Congress, the position upon tariff reform which under his lead was so firmly taken in the past canvass. In very well conceived sentences he takes the position; and declares his belief that the farmers will not fail to see that they, who sell their products without any protection and are the ones who chiefly suffer from excessive tariff duties. Whether the farmers will see this very soon or no, is not so clear as it might be; since in the recent election they seem to have shown great dullness of apprehension on the question. The Western states, where they prevail, clung more closely than ever to the Republican party, preaching the doctrine of high protection; and it was among the artisans of the East that the Democratic party found the most intelligent appreciation of its doctrine of tariff reform and reduction, which has been charged with being destructive to American industry.

The president says, and the whole party believes, that "the cause for which the battle is waged should never be compromised." "There should be no cessation of the struggle until a plan is perfected, fair and conservative toward existing industries, but which will reduce the cost to consumers of the necessities of life while it provides for our manufacturers the advantage of free raw materials and permits no injury to the interests of American labor;" nor until such perfected plan is executed.

The burning of a lot of battle flags in a G. A. R. room ought to warn the veterans that these relics should be kept in some fire proof building. In the old world battle flags hang in abbey, church, town hall and museum where they are as rare far more safe than in a clubroom. Instead of a wilderness of monuments at Gettysburg, of magnificence graded to the purpose of the builders rather than the merit of the combats, it would be better if a great hall had been erected wherein the battle flags would hang above memorials tablets to the regiments that carried them.

The artist Whistler comes back to America with a world-wide reputation and abundant means, having left this country a poor boy, thus reversing the usual order of things. Many thousands of poor boys have come over from Europe, won fortune and some fame and visited their native lands again, but very few have followed the Whistler plan.

It is estimated that Pennsylvania will have a population of over five millions by the next census. The census enumeration that year made the number of inhabitants 4,282,981, or 49 persons for each voter. This is the total vote for president was 997,786, indicating a population of 4,878,151 upon the ratio of voters to inhabitants in 1890. The increase of the population in the two years will be more than enough to swell the total to a round five millions, preserving about the same amount of increase from 1880 to 1890 as between 1870 and 1880, which was 760,940. In the ten years from 1870 to 1880 the increase of population in the state of New York was 700,112. If Pennsylvania in 1890 shall have kept her pace she will have made a long stride toward a recovery of the lead she lost to New York in 1870.

DR. WILLIAM L. DUDLEY, professor of chemistry in Vanderbilt University, has been conducting a series of experiments with mice and cigarettes with a view of determining the reasons why cigarettes are more harmful than cigars. He placed a mouse in a box and supplied him with air and purified cigarette smoke. The animal died in ten minutes and other mice did likewise with varying lengths of time. In each case one and one-fourth cigarettes were consumed before death. From these experiments and careful examination of the blood of the mouse, he concludes: 1. That the smoke of a cigarette is more poisonous than carbonic oxide is the most poisonous constituent of tobacco smoke; 2. That more injury results from cigarette than cigar or pipe smoking, because, as a rule, the smoke of the former is inhaled; 3. That cigarette smoking without inhaling is no more injurious than pipe or cigar smoking; 4. That the smoke of a cigarette inhaled, is as injurious as cigarette smoke inhaled; 5. That the smoke from a Turkish pipe, if inhaled, is as injurious as that of a cigarette inhaled.

PERSONAL.

Mrs. ROLAND HERR, known to the public as Miss Alice Herringer, of the Herringer company, died in New York on Saturday. Miss Hastings was born in Dublin, Ireland, was about thirty-two years of age, and was associated with Roland Herr's company for eight years.

JOHN CAWFORDE, aged 102 years, died in Washington on Saturday. He was a native of Donegal, Ireland, where he lived until the death of his wife, eight years ago. Then he emigrated to America to spend the rest of his days with his children. A centenarian brother of the deceased lived in Philadelphia, and another brother of 98 at Lancaster county, Pa., and a sister of 95 at West Grove, Chester county, Pa.

Miss Missa Woolverill is the Baltimore lady who is to marry Prince of Wales. She has been living in France for over 10 years and has known the German prince over six years, but her relatives did not think she would marry him on account of the opposition from his family. She is now residing in Paris, France. She is the daughter of R. Carter Woolverill and granddaughter of Dr. John Buckler, of Baltimore.

HON. CHANDLER F. BLAINE, in his letter to the executive ward Democratic association of Philadelphia, says: "You will remember that in 1872 the Democrats suffered something more than a Bull Sun disaster. But in '74 they had their Gettysburg, and in '76 their Appomattox. With a system of Democratic societies properly sustained and extended, I feel as certain as that I now live that the Democratic party will go back into executive power in 1892 with an overwhelming majority behind it, to remain there at least for a quarter of a century to come."

The Duties on Wools and Woollens. Secretary Fairchild in his annual report will allude to the practical ineffectuality of the duties imposed upon wools and woollens. He will, it is understood, recommend that they be equalized by reducing the wools duties as in the Mills bill. When this bill is demonstrated that the Republicans of the Senate do not propose to do anything with the tariff this session, a resolution embodying the secretary's recommendation on this subject may be put through the House. The Senate will probably amend it so as to equalize the duties by relating the wools duties to the standard of the wools duties, as in the Allison bill.

WANAMAKER'S

A truly great business never limits itself by past success. In this December, the great retail month, we hope to show you that this business is entirely great. The argument rests on more room and better service; more goods, better assorted and cheaper; sound notions translated into practice.

We wish each reader of this was an acute dry-goods critic—many of our readers are. Their criticism has fixed beyond cavil that we have won the place—the first of course—we sought this season on Novelty Dress Goods. By the added power of each criminal recruit would our place be all the more securely held.

How we welcome an examination of this stock, especially if a comparison follows with the other best of New York, Philadelphia—all America, all Europe! A bit vain, you say. Yes, with honest pride, and it is no shame to own it.

And if types don't fail us, there's more to say of Dress Goods Novelties.

Furniture. Christmas. A trade trait. The more bulky articles for presents are bought first, and, if bought here, are held for future delivery, as may be directed.

Three elevators to the third floor, and five stairways. One broad expanse of Furniture. No scattering to fill spaces, but solid rows upon rows of all lines belonging to the most complete stock. Only samples. Duplicates are stored in the factory, blocks away.

Dainty or sumptuous chairs, desks, tables, cabinets. The stock is its own catalogue. The variety the truth telling witness.

A wind-up word on those wonderful Black Faille Francaise Silks, fifty cents, and a dollar under price. We've brought in the last lot of them that can be had—one hundred and forty pieces. When they are gone (a matter of days) old prices again. For now they run like this:

Silks that are warranted to wear, that will not slip; rich finish, lustrous. The kind you can make a glove-fitting dress of and be sure that it will stay glove-fitting. Yards and yards of these Black Failles will be laid away to make hearts glad on Christmas morning.

A little racket in Corsets that has chipped some prices.

C. P. French Corset, large sizes only, from $1.75 to $2.00. L. G. Blue, pink, and white Satin, white and black, from $2.75, $3.25, $3.75, $4.25, $4.75, $5.25. P. E. French Corset, large sizes only, from $1.75 to $2.00. French Woven, in pink and blue, long waist, handsome shapely, carefully selected, were $1.25, now $1.00.

The price and quality notch of these can't be found outside.
