Will it Fix?

We print elsewhere an interesting comment upon the locomotion of industries, by Mr. Charles B. Forney, of Lebanon; who for many years was the manager of important interests of the Coleman, and is therefore particularly competent to speak of the iron industry of Eastern Pennsylvania.

Anthracite fuel grows cheaper instead of dearer. Quite probably this is only a temporary variation in the law of trade, which must eventually send a scarce article up to a higher comparative price than an abundant one.

Still every one knows that bituminous coal is more abundant and always will be cheaper than anthracite. It is easily mined and with little capital. The royalty is much less than upon anthracite; partly because of its greater abundance and partly of its less intrinsic value.

A YOUNG man of New York recently admitted that in about three years he had squandered $150,000 and it is figured that this youth had at the rate of $28,33 an hour, which may be called fast time.

THE Boston Herald is disturbed over the showing of the census that there has been an increase of illiterates in Massachusetts within ten years.

GENERAL CLINTON B. FISK tries to back down gracefully from the prohibition party leadership of New Jersey by declaring that the Democrats of intolerance have gone so far in favor of intolerance that every prohibitionist must join the Republicans.

There is a horrible story from Syracuse of how an aged German lost his only daughter and companion, a beautiful girl of seventeen, and, suspecting that she had been buried before life was extinct, opened the grave and found that his daughter had turned in her coffin and struggled to get out.

Our law makers in their wisdom have fixed a day in springtime for the planting of trees, for many things are more sure of being done if times are established for them, and the institution of Arbor Day takes away the excuse of forgetfulness from any who admit the public duty of tree planting.

who seem quite dumb to the power of beauty in art or nature. They may admit that trees give pleasant shade and so they tolerate them, but to make this shade more dense they do not hesitate to amputate main limbs and completely ruin the symmetry and grace of nature's work.

Public sentiment will some day halt the vandals who destroy trees for trifling reasons, but at present they have their way. For example, a citizen on Columbia avenue has been notified that his curb will have to be set back, although the walk is already narrow and the street wide enough for any easy passage of vehicles.

As a rule the farmers of this county do not seem to appreciate the value of good roads, and one of the strongest arguments against the abolishing of tolls for the purchase of the turnpikes has been that these usually well kept roads might be allowed to fall to the miserable condition of the township highways.

Many of the roads we now have were roughly blazed out through the forest by the early pioneers, but as a rule, the routes have changed considerably and will continue changing. When the saving of labor and advantage to property brought by good roads is realized as it should be, farmers will be the most critical of all men on road building.

The best engineering talent is employed on the railroads of the country, and the move towards technical and scientific education will help along the good time coming when even township roads will be built and cared for on good principles.

THE Boston Herald is disturbed over the showing of the census that there has been an increase of illiterates in Massachusetts within ten years.

THE occasional discovery of cases of this kind has encouraged a wholesome dread of danger of living burial and it is strange that in the present instance the fact that the body was warm did not arouse more than a curious remark from those preparing it for burial.

THE legislature of Michigan has passed a bill restoring capital punishment with almost prohibitory restrictions. The death penalty is to be inflicted either by hanging or electricity and no reporters can be present. Before it can be imposed the law requires that every juror must sign a verdict recommending its infliction, and even then the judge may exercise his discretion in sentencing the prisoner to death or to imprisonment for life.

Our law makers in their wisdom have fixed a day in springtime for the planting of trees, for many things are more sure of being done if times are established for them, and the institution of Arbor Day takes away the excuse of forgetfulness from any who admit the public duty of tree planting.

MEDICAL MONOPOLY NOT WANTED.

In the explanation of Massachusetts a bill is now pending whose object is to prohibit, under penalty of fine and imprisonment, the practice of "medicine, surgery or midwifery" by any other than the "regular" physicians.

"This crime," said the doctor, "one of the greatest in our medical history, would never have been discovered but for the suspicious attitude outside the profession. And he called attention to the fact that in five of the poisoning cases the regular physician certified the cause of death to pneumonia, typhoid fever, meningitis, bowel disease and Bright's disease respectively.

"This shows how far the 'regular' physicians are from being infallible. It would seem to be more in accordance with justice and common sense were they to perfect their own knowledge before they appeal to law to prohibit others from healing.

"When Garfield was shot five of the most regular physicians in the country spent three months probing for the bullet in the region of his left hip, and after his death it was found under his right shoulder-blade."
