TRADE IN TOBACCO.

The New York Market Improving. While Local Business is Dull.

The local tobacco market for the past week was dull. Only a few hundred cases of old tobacco were sold in small lots to cigar makers.

A few small packings of the 1888 crop were sold during the week to New York dealers on private terms, some of which was for export.

The freshets ruined the growing tobacco in the islands on the Susquehanna in Lycoming, Clinton and other counties in Central Pennsylvania and in the flats in New York State.

The market for the past week may be considered to have been fairly active. Old goods are moving off rapidly and as rapidly the inquiries for the new goods are increasing.

There are hardly any choice lots of old tobacco left to make any fair-sized selections from. The scattering sales amount to 1,200 cases, and we predict an early sale of the available supplies of the old crop.

Another indication of a few thousand bales of Sumatra took place at Amsterdam on Thursday, but it is hard to keep track of the changes in regard to the Dutch Maatschappijen in regard to the inscriptions seem to work like a charm and our American buyers are roped in just as cheaply as they can be represented.

There seems to be more tobacco selling the past week than for some time. All kinds were sold. New Onondaga sold to some extent, also Pennsylvania and will become a favorite for export than there has been for many years.

The sales of Sumatra reported are 300 bales, at $1.25 to $1.50. The new tobacco has been the recipients of much attention, and the prices were more liberal.
