The Finding of the Jury.

The coroner's jury finding the Johnstown disaster to be chargeable upon the South Fork club by reason of the weakness of the dam and the inadequacy of the waste weirs, is likely to bring the adjudication of the question of responsibility into the courts. The verdict seems to be justified by the facts, in its finding that the waste weirs were not sufficient for their purpose, and that the club officers were responsible for their condition. They had not the drainage for which they were designed, owing to their obstruction with fish screens and bridge posts, but chiefly because of the sagging of the dam towards its centre, several feet below its original line; which sagging was due to the improper materials and workmanship used by the club in repairing the dam when they took possession of the property. The result of this condition of the top of the dam was to permit the flow of water over it that had been calculated to go out through the waste weir.

There is a claim made on behalf of the club that the rain fall was of so extraordinary a nature that human foresight did not suffice to provide against it. This claim is not, however, sustained by evidence of any such water fall; and even if there was ground for it, the club is prevented from obtaining the benefit of it, because of their clear negligence in not securing the full flow of water through the waste weirs that they were calculated to take off.

The civil responsibility of the club for the damages caused by their negligence is clear, and it may undoubtedly be made to respond to the extent of its property; whether the members may be individually held to any extent, depends upon their liability under their charter. The criminal responsibility of the club officers is another matter; and the fact that the imperfect condition of the dam was of long standing, well known in the community and easily ascertainable, if not known, by all those who suffered from its irruption, who nevertheless took no legal measures to suppress the nuisance, goes very far toward relieving the officers of the club from the presumption of malice needed to sustain a criminal charge; no one charges that they suspected that the dam would ever burst. They seem to have had no over confidence in its security, not a fear of its weakness. The like disease affected the community. It was the disease of incredulity, that took so strong of them on the day destruction met them, when they gave no heed to the warnings they had that it was coming. The dam had no terrors for them until it overwhelmed them; and it is not in order for a community that was so content to sit under its dangers, to now rail loudly against its owners. The Johnstown Democrat, which just appears from its ruins, makes a like comment. It says: "If the dam was a constant menace to life and property, as all now believe, what can be said to palliate the conduct of the Johnstown people, and its authorities especially. There is far less excuse for their indifference and neglect in the matter than for the indifference of the South Creek Fork association." The comment is just. There is a dreadful responsibility resting upon human shoulders for this disaster; it rests upon those who had the means of knowing the danger, and who did know or did not act upon their knowledge. The men of knowledge about Johnstown were many. They had great interests in their charge and their responsibility was in proportion to them.

Labor in Iron and Steel.

The situation at Pittsburg in the labor market, in the iron industry that is so large a part of that city's industry, has evolved agreement between the operators and laborers in iron and a disagreement between the makers and workers of steel. The significance of the fact is in its revelation that the making of iron demands skilled labor to a much greater extent than the making of steel; which is in, many qualities, the product of machinery that may be moved without the use of much skilled labor.

The Carnegie firms, having dictated their terms to labor in the Edgar Thomson works, where they turn out steel rails at a cost for labor from the ingot furnace to the finished rail of only 8 cents per ton, have now undertaken to do the like thing at their Homestead works, where they make other kinds and shapes of steel. Here a greater quantity of skilled labor is required, and the task of defeating the association of skilled workmen will be correspondingly greater. The outcome is uncertain, but the probability is that the operators will succeed; as other steel manufacturers in the vicinity have lately done. If they do, it will follow that the steel manufacturers will all be soon relieved from the dictation of labor, and will have this advantage over the iron makers, in the greater cheapness of their labor. The result will be that steel will become the cheaper material, being the product of insensible machinery that can turn it out in great quantity and at little cost for manipulation. Iron will be the dearer product; but it can never lose its utility or suffer a failure in the demand for it. Its qualities will always maintain a market for it at any price it may command.

He Has Dropped.

Thomas V. Cooper, state senator, ex-Republican state chairman and ex-Republican candidate for governor, a statesmen of red head and ardent temperament, who voted for prohibition and proposed the abolition of the poll tax, and against whom the people voted on both proposition, has fallen upon the feather bed of the Philadelphia custom house; to which he has been led by Quay as to a place of retirement, after he had led him out of the state chairmanship, and in the course of leading him out of the race for the governorship. Mr. Cooper, bought off with this plum, will settle down to its enjoyment, and find in the accumulation of its emoluments, solider satisfaction than he has reaped in his weary work of serving the Lord and his party; in which work we will not say who got the service.

Wanamaker Wants Low Tariff.

Mr. Wanamaker again appears as an objector to high tariff as applied to his own business. He has not hesitated to struggle tooth and nail for the very lowest possible duty on the goods that he imports yet he insists that the highest possible tariff is necessary for the salvation of the country. The postmaster general therefore figures in a small way as an enemy of his country. His colleague the secretary of the treasury has asked the board of appraisers to answer several appeals that have been made to him.

In one case a wicker-work basket, one of the many imported by Postmaster General Wanamaker, was approved by a Philadelphia official under the head of boxes and assessed at 35 per cent. ad valorem. Mr. Wanamaker appealed, declaring it was a basket and, therefore, only dutable at 30 per cent. The board held with the Philadelphia appraiser, and Mr. Wanamaker will have to pay the high rate.

Our John's friends may protest that business policy and national policy are distinct matters, not to be entangled with one another, but President Cleveland believed in treating national affairs as very serious matters of business. Mr. Wanamaker's business is dependent upon the prosperity of a manufacturing community, and why does he imperil that prosperity by striving for the lowest possible tariff on his importations? If he was really alarmed at that mild protection measure, the Mills bill, he should be panic stricken at the free trade tendencies of business in manufacturing Philadelphia.

In the annual report of the secretary of internal affairs just published, Lorin Blodget explains the law of cyclones and urges more general attention to the one unfailing sign by which they may be anticipated. "Tornadoes themselves cannot be predicted singly, but the general condition necessary to their existence is well defined and readily indicated for at least eight or ten hours in advance. * * * If at any locality the barometer should be seen to fall rapidly and to get as much as half an inch below the mean it would then be certain that some part of the belt so affected would develop a storm. If the fall should be a full inch a violent storm would invariably attend it or soon follow it." Possibly on reading this some people will buy barometers and watch them until they get tired and forget it; about which time a cyclone may be looked for.

Since 1840 the average consumption per capita in the United States of distilled spirits has decreased to about one fourth of what it then was. The consumption of wine per capita has about doubled, and of malt liquors has increased to nearly nine times what it was in 1840, and yet it is only about one third the per capita consumption of England and less than half that of Germany. Statistics show that we are a very temperate people in the use of malt liquors, but they do not show the differences in the liquor used or in the climate and the temperament of the people.

In 1888 we used in this country distilled spirits amounting to 1.23 gallons for every man, woman and child of the population, which is about the record of France, and much worse than England or Germany. Denmark and Sweden show a fearful use of distilled spirits, the per capita consumption of the former amounting to 4.23 gallons. Cold Canada figures in the statistics as the most temperate of lands.

The insect that is making so much talk and trouble among the wheat growers of Ohio and Illinois is a very close relation of the small green fly that attacks rose bushes and plants in this neighborhood. "It is a small, greenish, or in some cases brownish, insect, with or without wings, infesting the leaves and heads of plants of the grass family. It obtains its food by inserting a pointed beak into the leaf or stem, and sucking out the sap. As the wheat gets ripe, it migrates to the more succulent oats, and, when these ripen, will go to various grasses. Its rate of multiplication is very great, it being estimated that a single louse may become the ancestor of many millions before autumn. It has many insect enemies. The presence of English sparrows in the wheat-fields led some to believe that they were feeding upon the lice; but an examination of stomach contents of a number shot while on wheat showed that the grain itself was what they were after.

According to Science the true eating banana is unknown in our markets and the bananas used here as a fruit are only used for cooking purposes. The eating banana is the madura and there are many varieties of it. The smaller are the more delicious; and the smallest of all, the so-called "lady-finger banana," with a skin hardly thicker than paper, is the most highly prized. Green cooking bananas are peeled, and roasted in the ashes, and eaten with butter; partially ripe ones are boiled for a few minutes with the skin on, and eaten with syrup or honey; and ripe ones are sliced lengthwise, and fried in olive oil or butter.

A Strange Custom In a Far Country.

From the New York Tribune.

There was once a Far Country, a great distance from this, which was ruled over by a wise and just caliph. And it was so that there occurred a serious railroad accident in this country, whereby many people were gathered to their fathers. And the next day there came to the palace of the caliph a director of the railroad on which happened this accident, and after bowing to the ground he lifted up his voice and said:

"Oh, most wise and just caliph, the rails spread out on us—tramps had pulled out the spikes with their teeth, but we knew it not. Of a certainty the rails did spread on us. Behold, it was the act of Allah!"

"So?" answered the caliph, as he stroked his beard; "truly I grieve to hear that the rails spread. But Allah is good. Mesrour," he continued, turning to his executor, "behead this man at the fourth hour without fail."

And it was so that at ten minutes after the fourth hour his body was delivered to his friends.

And the next month there was another grievious accident on another road, whereby more true believers were cut off, even as may be the enemies of the prophet. And the day following the president of the road knocked at the palace gate and was admitted by a slave. And when he was come into the presence of the caliph he prostrated himself and said:

"There is but one God, and Mahomet is his prophet! Most wise and just caliph, we have had an accident on the Damascus Short Line, and many true Mussulmen are slain. Allah is good! Behold, there was a washout, and our engineer wist it not, but plunged in at the slow rate of sixty Christian miles to the Christian hour. See, I weep that such things should be!"

"Indeed!" answered the mighty caliph; "so there was a washout that ye wot not of. I suspected as much. Mesrour, when the faithful go to noonday prayers behead this man who was ignorant of the washout."

And, behold, the true believers were even then passing to the noonday prayers, and Mesrour took the president to his studio and finished up the job in time for late prayers himself.

And on the tenth day of the eighth month, on another road, there was still another accident, and a score of true followers of Islam bit the dust. And the next day at the ninth hour after midnight the board of directors, and president, and a general manager or two, and three vice-presidents, knocked and prayed that they might make speech with the most wise and just caliph. And he suffered them to enter and they fell on their faces and worshipped him, and then the president said:

"Commander of the faithful, Mahomet is mighty, and thou art his true vicar on earth. By the beard of the prophet there has been trouble with the Mecca limited. Great caliph, many of the subjects are no more. Thus it was: The locomotive was a new one and it became frightened at a bicycle and snorted a couple of times and jumped into the ditch. Truly we knew not that it was one of these skittish locomotives. Oh, mighty son of the prophet, we rend our garments that it is so. But the ways of Allah are mysterious!"

"Mesrour" said the caliph, "it seems to me that I have heard this story before."

"You have, son of Mahomet."

"The engine shied on them—well, you know the old prescription—give 'em the same razzle-dazzle 'em!"

And the great caliph, who was wise and good as he was great, took up the blessed Alcoran and read its words, but ere he could finish a page they were razzled.

For Mesrour never let business accumulate on his hands.

And it happened that there were never any more accidents in the land of the commander of the faithful even unto this day.

The other railroad folks took the hint.

But in closing it should be said that this is a very Far Country indeed, being a great many days' journey from this country.

A Bathing Master Loses His Life.

A sad drowning accident occurred at Long Branch, Tuesday, by which a brave man lost his life while trying to save a hotel guest. The man who was drowned was William Henry Kirby, a native of Long Branch. He was employed as an assistant bathing master at the bathing grounds of the Scarboro, at Ocean and South Bath avenues. At noon one of the guests of the hotel went bathing, and was foolish enough to venture out from shore fully half a mile, being a fine swimmer. He became exhausted and called for help, at the same time throwing up his arms.

Abner Hobart, one of the bathing masters, started to his assistance with a life preserver. Bathing Master Kirby followed with the end of a life line in his hand. When within a short distance of Mr. Hirsch, poor Kirby in turn became exhausted. His struggles in the water were witnessed by a large crowd of excited cottagers and hotel guests. He finally sank for the last time amid the shrieks of the spectators. Bathing Master Hobart succeeded in bringing young Hirsch ashore. Liberal doses of brandy were administered to Mr. Hirsch, but it was fully an hour before he recovered. He is a medical student in New York. Kirby's body was washed ashore near Seabright. He was married about five months ago to Miss Zaidee Quirk, of Long Branch.

HOOD'S SARSAPARILLA.

That Tired Feeling

Is experienced by almost everybody at this season, and many people resort to Hood's Sarsaparilla to drive away the languor and exhaustion. The blood, laden with impurities which have been accumulating for months, moves sluggishly through the veins, the mind fails to think quickly and the body is still slower to respond. Hood's Sarsaparilla is just what is needed. It purifies, vitalizes and enriches the blood, makes the head clear, creates an appetite, overcomes that tired feeling, tones the nervous system, and imparts health and vigor to the whole body.

HOOD'S SARSAPARILLA

"My appetite was poor. I could not sleep, had headache a great deal, pains in my back, my bowels did not move regularly. Hood's Sarsaparilla in a short time did me so much good that I feel like a new man. My pains and aches are relieved, my appetite improved. I say to others who need a good medicine, try Hood's Sarsaparilla and see." GEORGE F. JACKSON, Roxbury Station, Conn.

MAKES THE WEAK STRONG

For years I was sick every spring, but last year took Hood's Sarsaparilla and have not seen a sick day since." G. W. SLOAN, Milton, Mass.

"I take Hood's Sarsaparilla as a spring tonic and I recommend it to all who have that miserable tired feeling." C. PAEMELEE, Bridge Street, Brooklyn, N. Y.

We haven't the biggest mills in the world, but there is no better mill anywhere—at least there is no mill that can make better flour. So say thousands of people in this community, and we take their word for it.

If you have trouble with your baking, this hot weather, you will perhaps discover that the trouble lies with your flour—provided you do not use Levan's Flour. Second dam by Howard's sir Charles, thoroughbred.

Third dam by Smith's Messenger, son of Hill's Messenger.

STORM KING is a bay, stands 16 hands and weighs about 1,200 lbs. Has always taken first premium at state and county fairs. His colts are large and handsome, and five that have been sold averaged $349.00 at an average age of one and a half years. He was taken right out of the stud and with very little preparation reduced his record from 2:34¾ to 2:30, trotting three heats in 2:40, 2:31 and 2:30. He went a quarter in one of the miles in 35 seconds—a 2:20 gait—which shows his capacity if I could spare him long enough in the stud to be prepared for very fast work.

TERMS, $50.00 for a foal until his present book is full, after which he will stand at $75.00. jy5-tfd. DANL. G. ENGLE, Marietta, Pa.
