ADDRESS, THE INTELLIGENCER, Lancaster, Pa.

LANCASTER, PA., July 11, 1889.

What the Lawyers Say.

The Philadelphia people are favored with a statement of the number of Reading railroad lawyers who have agreed that the company has a right to extend its railroad to Twelfth and Market streets from Broad and Callowhill, without asking leave of the city councils. Every lawyer belonging to the road from President Keim, of the coal and iron company, who is hauled into the list, down to the youngest one of those who have ever earned a fee from the road, and up to Gowen, who was once its great "I am," is declared to have said that there is no doubt whatever of the power of the road to do the thing, and it is going ahead to do it.

We will venture the bet of a big apple that none of the good lawyers on the Reading list ever gave such an opinion. The company may make a break to force its road through, as it threatens to do, and it can hire the services of all these lawyers to help it to do it; for it is a notable quality of the lawyer in general that he is as ready to fight for what he knows to be wrong, in law or morals, as for what he thinks to be right; and often he is more willing, since the wrong to be done gives him an excuse for charging a bigger fee, by way of salve to the conscience he claims to have, when he goes to church, but does not take with him to his office.

It is clear to any man's good sense that it must be a very doubtful right which the Reading or any other railroad company claims to cross the streets of a city at will, without consent of the city's legislature. Such a right is clearly, in our judgment, contrary to public policy; and if so it can find no protection in the law. It is a notable illustration of the weakness of this claim on the part of the Reading, that the declaration in its charter giving it the right to terminate at some point in Philadelphia is quoted as authority for its claim to make a fresh terminus in the city, after it has for so many years had a fixed terminus. The claim, if sound, would throw the whole of Philadelphia, in its every part, open to its changing terminals, through all ages, and enable it to wind its snake like form through every section.

With all this power centred upon it by the simple words of its charter, the people of Philadelphia are, perhaps, to be congratulated that it proposes to run into them with an elevated and not a surface road. Of course its charter right to seek a new terminal, if it exists, is for a surface road terminal. An elevated road was not then contemplated, and the charter does not cover the right to build it; just as the right to run a charcoal furnace does not carry the right to use stone coal; but in its beneficence the railroad is willing to trade a surface for an elevated road in the city; and the city is expected to say amen and be thankful. We have heard of a good many silly railroad undertakings; but this of taking possession of a town without the consent of its councils, is much the most foolish; and the illustrious names of the noble army of hired lawyers said to back the scheme do not shake this conviction. They are firm hirelings.

A Shame and a Sham.

Some people suspect and say that the Sullivan-Kilrain fight was not a contest but a make-believe; and there is abundant reason for the belief. Sullivan was so easily superior to his antagonist and so particularly successful nevertheless in not hurting him, that it is safe enough to conclude that he did not want to do so, and that there was no real fire in the fight, save the fire upon the spectators' dollars, which was very successful. Of this order of men, of course nothing can be expected from their honor, and they may be believed to have been quite ready to fall into a scheme to make money, with ease and certainty, by a championship prize fight, which should be well advertised, and which should bring the Boston champion and the Baltimore challenger together, after being drawn in palace cars and special trains to distant New Orleans. The statement of the fact that, in the heat of summer, these pugilists were carried to the hottest part of the country, at great cost and with great noise, to do a law-forbidden thing, shows clearly enough the nature of the whole scheme; and the demonstration was simply clinched by the successful efforts of the friendly fighters not to hurt one another.

The only things that have been hurt are the law and the dignity of the governor of Mississippi; whose proclamation forbiding the fight has had no other result so far save to advertise it. Maybe it may have fruit hereafter. If we were the governor the state of Mississippi, we would have the bodies of the prize-fighters, their backers and attendance if there was power in the law to get them. And we would furthermore have the bodies of the railroad officers who dared to carry these law-breakers into the state in defiance of the proclamation, and who gave their ready assistance to the violation of the law. They are even more guilty than the prize fighters; since they enjoy their privileges from the state and have a great stake in the preservation of its dignity and the observance of good order. But railway managers are the blindest people on earth, when a dollar is at the end of their nose; they cannot see beyond it. The safety of the country demands a speedy construction of the law, which will hold railroad presidents and directors criminally responsible for the unlawful deeds of the corporations; to the end that the presence of a jail may supply their lack of a conscience and subdue them to such control of the great interests in their charge as will make them inoffensive to the public peace, if they cannot be made to promote it.

Trust Taxes.

The sugar trust has closed the St. Joseph refinery, paying $18,000 a year to the stockholders, a mere trifle of the vast sum it takes from the people by its regulation of the price of sugar. Once upon a time a people rebelled because of taxation without representation, and just now that same people, then few and feeble, now great and strong, are quietly submitting to taxation without representation, and also without the smallest trace of a right to tax or the least claim of any service rendered by the taxing party. The increase of the price of sugar has nothing in the world to justify it but the false right of might. The trust controls the sugar trade, and we must pay the price it fixes or do without sugar. This unnatural increase in the cost of a necessary of life is a tax levied upon us by a council in which we have no voice and over which we have no control. In this matter the trust is our ruler and we have only to let these trusts alone for a time and they will form one giant organization, taxing at their pleasure all the great staples and making democracy a grand burlesque.

It is a remarkable coincidence that subjects another Johnstown to the ravages of a flood and the destructive power of the water rushing out of bursted dams. If there are any more Johnstowns in the country that lie in valleys and beneath dams, we should think that they would feel like promptly changing their names, as they cannot well change their places. The dams and the clouds are apparently opposed to the calm contemplation of Johnstowns beneath them; clouds burst and dams burst and Johnstowns go.

The loaded revolver is so often heard from in unpleasant ways that it is a pleasure to record a little incident of recent occurrence in which the revolver figured gloriously. Courageous Mrs. Keuter, of Missouri, was alone at the farm house when a tramp of dangerous aspect appeared and began to behave with alarming insolence. The lady ran to the table drawer where the much-abused revolver lay ready loaded with seven ball cartridges of large calibre. She cocked the weapon and ordered the tramp to keep quiet. She then formed him in line and marched him out on the road and then to the railroad. Keeping close behind him, she continued the procession for two miles along the track until they reached a field where her husband and another man were at work. The tramp was taken to New Cassel, and resided for thirty days in the county jail.

Our exports of mineral oils in June were about half a million larger than in the same month of 1888 and for the year ending June 30, the oil exports show an increase of nearly three millions, all for the glory of the Standard monopoly.

Our exports of cotton in June are nearly four millions less in value than in June of 1888.

Pugilism is of old and respectable lineage, they say; but so are many things not at all respectable nowdays. Highway robbery with murderous accompaniments was an art practiced by the nobility and gentry of ancient times, and yet even a Mississippi sheriff would hardly smile openly upon it nowdays.

Hurrah for Billy Muldoon! Hark to this wisdom from the man who trained Sullivan: "I think boxing a grand exercise, and will do all that I can to encourage it, but I think ring fighting is too brutal, and I want to see no more of it." Muldoon says that he is "through forever with ring fights," because he never again wants "to see a man so knocked about and punished as Kilrain was." To appreciate the value of these remarks we need to remember that the speaker is a famous wrestler and bruiser.

Edward Stephenson, commissioner of imigration at New York, is given as authority for the statements that an Irish merchant has furnished a description of covert methods by which the British government sends paupers to America in defiance of our laws. Mr. Stephenson learned that Erris, in county Mayo, Ireland, had been placarded with posters requesting persons desirous of emigrating to America to apply to Emigration Agent Burke. There were many applications, and Burke selected 100 of the poorest and most worthless families, shipping them at the rate of one family a week, his method being to put one man in as the head of the family and to send a lot of others as his children and relatives. This statement was made on the authority of the parish priest, whose word was corroborated by Mr. John S. Murphy, a leading merchant. The commissioner wrote to both and Mr. Murphy has just replied: "The poorest and most worthless class are sent from this place on what is termed 'the free emigration,' by what is called here the emigration commission. The commission is, I believe, only nominal; it is embodied in the person of the gentleman you mention as Mr. Burke, who was formerly vice guardian of Balmadlet union. He has had a great number of very poor families—undoubtedly poor in some cases—on his list and from that list are selected small batches who are sent off weekly." It looks very much as if the British government had descended to the smuggling of paupers into the United States. Some four years ago our government protested strongly against the movement which was then openly and vigorously conducted. If the material is good there is no visible reason why they should not send it to one of England's many colonies. The commissioner says that Castle Garden is a cover. Emigrants are taken charge of by agents immediately on their arrival and sent to remote parts of the country. The people are not alive to the question, and the clerks in the garden are between two fires; on the one hand, the presidents of the Irish Emigration society and of the German society, of New York, each of whom has a full vote in the board, and on the other hand, the state commissioners, whose duty it is to enforce the law. This is a state of things that demands the attention of our intensely protective American president and cabinet. Perhaps they can stop free trade in paupers.

Forest Leaves, the bright little monthly published by the Pennsylvania Forestry association, discusses the degrees in which forest destruction may be held to blame for the Johnstown disaster and the great floods.

"An unseasonable, protracted heated spell had prevailed over a large section of the country, which had been robbed of most of its woodland, the atmosphere, highly expanded, was loaded with moisture, and cold currents, driven by high winds, caused an immense precipitation—naturally greatest where the mountains formed a barrier. Here, again, so much of the area had been stripped of trees that but a limited portion of the rainfall was held back—the major part rushing in torrents to form the flood which broke booms, swept away bridges, destroyed dams and inundated cities and towns. The waste weir of a great dam, probably ample to discharge any accumulation from its drainage area when well timbered, was inadequate to carry away the rapid rush of water from a largely denuded area, and as the floods spread over the embankment, which was not built for a 'spell,' the result was to be expected; the dam was cut away and a community engulfed. That a large area of forests would have prevented a flood, is not our claim, but rather that the sparsely timbered district materially added to the intensity and destructive force of the rainfall."

In support of these assertions high authorities are quoted from the time of Plato to our own times. If all these things are so, it is certainly high time that some very determined efforts were made to save what trees we have, and to encourage the planting of more of them.

PERSONAL.

Maurice B. Flynn, a prominent politician in New York city, died at Long Branch on Tuesday night.

Rev. J. H. Machebeuf, Roman Catholic bishop of Denver, Colorado, died on Wednesday at the age of 77 years.

Gov. Fitzhugh Lee, of Virginia, will accept the superintendency of the Lexington (Va.) Military institute. He will not take the place until his term of office as governor expires on Jan. 1st, 1890.

Col. Robert G. Ingersoll is accepted by those who know as one of the best cooks in New York. He is said to be a gourmet of the highest altitude, and his friends say he prepares with his own hands the biggest part of the menu at the private dinners he gives at his home.

Julian Hawthorne has denied the authorship of the "Arthur Richmond" letters. Dr. Dana has characterized their being ascribed to "Gail Hamilton" as "fudge," so a new author turns up. He is the late A. R. Cazanran, the dramatist of the Union Square Theatre, New York, who is said to have claimed their authorship several times while alive. The work was his, based on suggestions from Thorndyke Rice.

HOOD'S SARSAPARILLA.

Do Not Neglect

That tired feeling, impure blood, distress after eating, pains in the back, headache, or similar affections till some powerful disease obtains a firm foothold, and recovery is difficult, perhaps impossible. Take Hood's Sarsaparilla, the defender of health, in time to banish all bad feelings and restore you to perfect condition. Hood's Sarsaparilla has peculiar curative power, and accomplishes cures where other preparations fail.

THAT TIRED FEELING.

"During the summer I was feeling all run down, and thinking I needed something to tone up my system, I took Hood's Sarsaparilla and felt much better. I was also troubled with dyspepsia, and Hood's Sarsaparilla helped me more than anything else." J. R. Darrow, Ft. Wayne, Ind.

"My wife and myself were both generally run down. Hood's Sarsaparilla brought us out of that tired feeling, and made us feel like young people again. It has done more for us than all other medicines together." Richard Hawshurst, Amityville, Long Island, N. Y.

IMPURE BLOOD

"From childhood I was troubled with pimples, and every remedy failed till I took Hood's Sarsaparilla. I have taken five bottles and now the pimples are almost gone, and my general health is much improved. I am feeling better than for some time, and I highly recommend Hood's Sarsaparilla." W. Evans, 465 Lexington Avenue, Brooklyn, N. Y.

We haven't the biggest mills in the world, but there is no better mill anywhere—at least there is no mill that can make better flour. So say thousands of people in this community, and we take their word for it.

If you have trouble with your baking, this hot weather, you will perhaps discover that the trouble lies with your flour—provided you do not use Levan's Flour. If you are using that article, and still have trouble with your baking, perhaps it is because of the oven. It can't be the flour if you use Levan's!

Second dam by Howard's Sir Charles, thoroughbred.

Third dam by Smith's Messenger, son of Hill's Messenger.

STORM KING is a bay, stands 16 hands and weighs about 1,200 lbs. Has always taken first premium at state and county fairs. His colts are large and handsome, and five that have been sold averaged $316.00 at an average age of one and a half years. He was taken right out of the stud and with very little preparation reduced his record from 2:34½ to 2:30, trotting three heats in 2:30, 2:31 and 2:30. He went a quarter in one of the miles in 35 seconds—a 2:20 gait—which shows his capacity if I could spare him long enough in the stud to be prepared for very fast work.

TERMS.—$30.00 for a foal until his present book is full, after which he will stand at $75.00.
