ADDRESS, THE INTELLIGENCER.

LANCASTER, PA., July 15, 1889.

A Wrong Movement. The Johnstown people have had amcet-ing in which they resolved that it was quite too bad that the governor's board of administration of the flood funds was so slow about the distribution and was disposed to be so inquisitive about the condition of those claiming a share, They resolved that the money should be distributed at once and in cash; and that no one should be asked to swear as to his private income and need of assistance. Furthermore they requested the relief committees in the various cities to mittee all funds they may have on hand. It is evident that these Johns-send directly to the Johnstown local comtown people have pretty well recovered their spirits and that the flood did not wash out their "cheek." It is refreshing to the contributors of the money for the relief of these people, to be told that they consider it a hardship that they are asked to swear that they need it; and that they kick against the direction of the state board that is distributing the bounty, that the money shall be distributed to relieve distress and not to restore losses. The Johnstown people seem to think that all those who suffered by the flood are proper beneficiaries of the relief fund; which is a serious misapprehension. It is those whom it has left destitute who have the first claim to relief; and next those who, though not destitute, are in distress. Certainly those who lost, but are still in comfortable circumstances, can justly claim nothing, and should be booted to soreness for thinking that they can. And he would be a fool indeed who would trust flood funds for distribution to a committee with such ideas as to where it should go. The proper distribution of the flood funds will be a very delicate matter, and will call for a great deal of wisdom on the part of the state committee. No one can justly complain of the deliberation with which they essay the undertaking, and particularly is it ungracious for the Johnstown sufferers to snap at the hand held out to feed them. But such is the want of the beneficiary always. He looks upon the fund money as his own, and thinks he is wronged by every moment of its delay in reaching him; forgetting that he has no real tit'e to it; that the ownership is in the trustees who hold it, until they give it out; and that a decent behavior in people awaiting a benefaction commands them to patience and modesty. The Johnstown people are not the only flood sufferers by any means, and the funds in hand are not alone for their use. We see that they figure their losses at a sum that will swallow the fund a good many times over. We are not surprised that people who pass such resolutions make such figures. We have no doubt whatever that all the real need of assistance to che flood sufferers, all over the state, will be amply met by the judicious distribution of the great relief fund.

His Natural State.

The Pennsylvania railroad proceeds to show the people of Philadelphia that it has as much right as the Reading to take possession of the streets, and is now surveying a route that will take it from Broad street to the Delaware. It is clear that it may build it, if the Reading may continue its road from Broad and Callowhill to Market and Tweifth streets. The proposition is that railroads may cross any street they please and as they please. One would think that it would not be easy to find even railroad presidents capable of such absurd assumption; and the only way to reconcile the fact that the Reading is making it is to conclude that the natural state of the railroad president is that of the ass.

A Governor's Task. Governor Lowry, of Mississippi, bids fair to win the very high consideration of the country; if his deeds are as good as words, he will certainly get it. He proposes not only to seize upon the pugil-ists who violated Mississippi laws, but also upon the railroad and its officers who defied the proclamation forbidding the encounter. There can be no fair question but that the railroad officials aided and abetted the fight for the sake of the money they made out of it. They even admit it and claim that they acted under advice of counsel. If so, it was bad advice; for there is no possible way of escaping the conclusion that they encountered the penalties fixed by the law upon prize fighters and their abettors. Mississippi law, it is said, vitiates the charter of a railroad so offending; and that punishment would not be too severe for so glaring an offense as this case shows.

The Strike Averted. The great strike at the Homestead steel works' has been averted. The parties met in determined opposition; and after studying the position, the employers sought a conference and yielded enough to secure agreement. The vital point in the matter was the demand of the manufacturers that they should have cheaper labor than their competitors; a demand which obviously the steel workers' association could not accede to, without throwing their men in other mills out of employment, by the consequent silencing of such mills thus discriminated against in the wages scale. When it became clear to the Carnegie firm that this great advantage in steel making could not be gained by them without defeating the ironworkers' association, they came down as gracefully as they could, and we are told that "some essential points were conceded and that the conference is still proceeding." All of which means that the steel workers' association have sub-stantially succeeded in their resistance to the manufacturers' unfair demand. It are apt to be reckless in the adoption of radical and dangerous methods. Already we have men talking of a govern-ment control of industries as a cure for the trust difficulties, and the wildest dreams of the socialist are reflected in the speculations of would-be reformers. If the growth of trusts is not quickly checked we may soon find the socialists as active and bold in America as they are in Germany.

A movement has been started for the celebration of the thirtieth anniversary of the discovery of oil, and the attention of the people is now being drawn more forcibly than ever to the fearfully rapid growth of monopolies, whereby the wealth so bountifully given to us in so many ways is being concentrated with alarming rapidity in the hands of a

The khedive of Egypt is a rare and curious specimen of royalty. In dispatches relating to Egypt's troubles with the dervishes he is not once mentioned, though his troops under English officers are doing the fighting; but in his own land he makes a great display of power, and though his personal expenses are limited to a half million a year he manages to spend it very effectively. Whenever he drives out he is surrounded by a detachment of cavalry with drawn swords, but his people cannot help thinking of the days when their khedives not only protected themselves but also their frontiers and marched armies to Khartoum and Abyssinia. They have the satisfaction, however, of knowing that the present khedive is a worker, and the listed English have barely their share of credit for the reforms in tax collecting, for Mehamet Ali is a good talker and has a great deal to say of his own deeds virtues. He is quoted as complaining that his ten years' reign has been equal to forty years in work and " If life were a matter of pleasure I would be a fool to remain on the throne, I believe, however, that God put man on the world for a purpose other than this. Duty, not pleasure, is the chief end of man. I do the best I can for my country and my people, and I feel the happiest when I do the most work and when my work is the hardest. When I to the throne the people were surprised that I put the prince on the same footing as other people before the courts. Now, thank God, there is no differonce in justice. The prince and the fellah are the same in our courts and the former may be punished like the latter." He has only one wife, but is a devout Mussulman, and in spite of the prejudice against him as the tool of the conquering English he has managed to make himself popular. Now this sober and alert rater, who would seem a very model for the European kings and emperors, is forced to submit all his official acts to the approval of English and French agents residing in his palace. He pays four millions a year in tribute to Turkey and the enormous interest on the old Turkish loans made by Europeans. British troops aid the defense of his frontiers and English-

THE exports of breadstuffs for June amounted to $9,165,539 about two millions more than in June of '88; but for the twelve months ending June 30 the total value of this class of exports was a little over a hundred and twenty millions; about four and a half millions less than last year. Two-thirds of our June exportation of breadstuffs was in wheat and wheat flour, and most of the remaining third was corn. Of oats, and barley we export very little.

Is another column will be found the amazing but true and impartial history of the Standard Oil company. This is the second of a series of articles on trusts now appearing in the Baltimore Sun, and thoughtful readers of every shade of olitical faith must be impressed with the gravity of the danger to the whole people from the organized monopolies that Mr. Blaine defends as private affairs.

A PATHETIC ROMANCE.

The Story Revealed by the Discovery of The Story Revealed by the Discovery of a Skeleton in a Cave.
Editor Kauffman, of the Chester Valley Union, and W. W. Potts, of Warwick, superintendent of one of the extensive granite quarries at Falls of French Creek, tell one of the strangest stories on record, and vouch for its entire authenticity. This is a wild and romantic region about twelve miles from Valley Force when twelve miles from Valley Ferge, where through a large area immense granite boulders are piled in all sorts of fantastic shapes and which in the earlier history of the state was a hiding place for robbers and wild beasts. Recently while a new marry was being place for robbers and wild beasts. Recently while a new quarry was being opened at Falls of French Creek, a cave was discovered with a skeleton in it. A was found alongside the green glass bottle was found alongside the green glass bottle was found alongside the skeleton, and Mr. Potts took possession of it. In the evening at his bome he opened it and found a manuscript, faded and discolored by time. The manuscript is addressed to Miss Virginia Randolph, of Richmond, Virginia. He had paried from her but a short time before to rejoin his command, having been home to be cured of a wound. The writer signs curred of a wound. The writer signs himself Arthur L. Carrington of the same place, and states that he was with Washington at Valley Forge in 1778. He goes on to say that he was sent out on a foraging expedition to the neighborhood of French Creek, when he received word that the British had sent a considerable force to cut him off. The writer says that his men took refuge with friends while he made his way to the cave, where he had hidden before. It was marked y a rock just over the entrance, so nicely alanced that a man could move it slightly ith one hand.

by a rock just over the entrance, so nicely talanced that a man could move it slightly with one hand.

The flecing patriot took shelter inside, and had hardly done so when the enemy came near and fired three shots after his retreating men. The concussion must have destroyed the balance of the stone above the entrance, for it fell and held the writer a prisoner. When convinced that he must die he wrote the letter explaining his situation and cloquently protesting his love for his sweetheart. The date of the manuscript is May 29, 1778. The letter relates his futile efforts to dig his way out through the walls of solid rock, how he halloced in the vain hope that some one would hear him until his voice was completely worn out; of his hunger and finally of the symptoms of the return of a fever through which he had passed, which be welcomed as likely to hasten his release from suffering.

Mr. Poits says that he wrote to an old friend in Richmond, and that this friend sent him word that his grandmother's maiden name had been Rambalph, and that in an old family burying greened, near her house, was a monument with this inscription: "Died of a broken heart, on the 1st of March, 1789, Virginia Handelph, aged 21 years and 9 days. 'Faithful unto death.'"

This friend also sends Mr. Poits two old letters written 110 years age to Alice Peyton by Rachael Bandolph, in which the disappearance of the young man is referred to and the approaching end of the young girl. Mr. Potts concludes his statement as follows: "Arthur Carrington's remains are about to be removed, and will soon rest by the side of his beloved in Virginia." Mr. Potts says that he has the original manuscript, and Editor Kauffman gives the entire story a strong editorial endorsement.

CANDINAL GIBBONS ON LABOR.

CANDINAL GIBBONS ON LABOR. The Right of Workingmen to Organize Maintained.

was an essay at monopoly, permissible and indeed prompted by the laws of the country, that was happily beaten.

Time For Alarm.

The plain and clear evidences of the evil effects of trusts are great enough to arouse the land against them, but the indirect effects of a failure to crush them alow may be far more serious than we can imagine. When people are confronted with an evil of this sort that land. In our days there is a universal tendency toward organization in every department of trade and business. It would be as mignet to deny to workingmen the right to band together because of the abuses incident to such combinations as to withhold the same right from capitalists, because they sometimes unwarrantably seek to crush or absorb weaker rivals. Another potent reason for encouraging labor unions suggests itself. Secret secicies, lurking in dark places, and plotting the overthrow of existing governments, have been the bane of continental Europe. The repressive policy of those governments and their suspicion of the intelligence and virtue of the people have given rise to those mischievous organizations, for men are apt to conspire in secret, if not permitted to express their views openly. The public recognition of the right to organize, implies a confidence in the intelligent and honesty of the masses; it affords them an opportunity of training themselves in the school of self-government and in the art of self-discipline; it takes away from them every excuse and pretext for the formation of dangerous societies."

HOMESTEAD'S STRIKE ENDED.

The Peace Conference Reaches a Harmonlous Agreement. Homestead was made happy Sunday evening by the announcement that the strike or lockout at Carnegie, Phipps & Co.'s works at that place was practically settled. The statement was true. The conferrees of the firm and those of the Amalgamated association, after an all-day Sunday session, finished their labors at 6:30 o'clock Sunday night, and effected a basis of settlement that when ratified by the Homestead men will end the trouble that had threatened to become very serious. The terms of settlement are about as follows: The repairs on the works are to be resumed Monday, and the milis started as soon as possible. The men will be the old employes, and their wages will not be governed by Mr. Carnegie's sliding scale, though the Amalgamated association has conceded a scale based upon a some-what similar principle. It takes effect at once, and will continue in use until Jan-uary next; thereafter to be changed not tener than once in three months. Mr. Carnegie did not cable any instructions. One of the greatest factors in the settlement of this vexed matter was un-doubtedly the fair way in which the men offered to treat with their employers, but there was another one equally potent, but one about which little was said or known. At the very time this peace conference was in session a number of workmen in Carnem session a number of working in Carnegie's Pittsburg mills and those of Jones & McLaughlin, were deciding to take a very important step. This was to quit workabout 10,000 of them and, after fully arming themselves, to march in a body to Homestead to prevent any non-union men from attempting to work in the mills, and also to "kill off" any gang of Pinkerton men that might be imported to guard Hungarians and others applying for work. This meant the bloodiest labor trouble that was ever witnessed in this country, but it has now been averted.
