

TWO YEARS. 1-LAST YEAR. They strolled on the beach by the bright summer sea: He and she. And they never paid any attention to me. He and she. His air was superior and to all that he said she modestly listened and hung down her head. While with swift flying blushes her fair face grew red. Dear me!

11-THIS YEAR. Again they are seen on the beach by the sea. She and he. That they remarried this year you will quickly agree. She and he. In silence he stalks while she lays down the law. A man more submissive the world never saw. He's learned that a kitten has claws in her paw. Dear me!

BOILED TO DEATH BY STEAM. John Lappan, Post Up in a Firebox, is Slowly slain. John Lappan, aged 22, son of James Lappan, the wealthy boiler manufacturer of Lawrenceville, Pa., met with a terribly tragic death. He was killed by steam at a pressure of seventy-five pounds to the square inch, in such a position that a crowd of grieved fellow workmen were powerless to afford him the slightest aid. Just before 10 o'clock Saturday night Lappan climbed into the firebox of a locomotive in the Parkman roundhouse to "plug a line," as the operation of tightening the joints of the flue system is called. He gave the end of the flue a smart tap with his hammer, and the blow forced the end of the flue into the boiler, releasing the steam through a two-inch hole, half upon the body of the young workman. He was cramped, unable to move, and the steam, at the pressure of seventy-five pounds, fairly flayed him alive, the noise drowning his frantic screams. He remained under medical care. The workmen in the roundhouse were unable to get to the locomotive and no help could be afforded until the pressure in the boiler had exhausted itself through the aperture made by the flue. Lappan was still alive when taken from the firebox. He was taken to the hospital, where he died at 1 o'clock Sunday morning in excruciating pain. His wife was away in the country. The young couple had recently lost a child, and when the sad news reached Mrs. Lappan she became unconscious. She reached the hospital a few moments before her husband's death, and her condition was so alarming that she remains under medical care. Undertaker Moreland notified Coroner McDowell, who held an inquest. So terrible had been the effect of the scalding that not a particle of skin adhered to the body. The family of the victim's father are all at Lancaster City for the funeral. The Penn hospital surgeons stated that no severe case of scalding by steam had never before been presented in their experience. When Lappan was brought to the hospital his clothing was removed and he was enveloped from head to foot in cotton smeared with glycerine and external opiates, which somewhat alleviated his agony. His lungs, however, had almost been destroyed by the steam he had inhaled, and his efforts to voice his sufferings were extremely pitiable. Undertaker Moreland's attendants had a difficult task in restoring the remains of the poor fellow to a semblance of humanity.

Shaken, Broiled and Drenched. There are three particulars of English grammar. They are also the three successive conditions undergone by every day of every third day by the unhappy wretch heated enough to allow fever and ague to fasten its clutch upon him. No one who has not been drenched by the scalding steam of a boiler can appreciate the sufferings of the wretched man who uses it in every type of malarial disease, whether intermittent or bilious result. For nearly thirty years this has been a professionally recognized specific for not only the most tenacious malarial, but also for our own soil, but in tropical and equatorial lands where the scourge is prevalent at all seasons and in its worst form. Biliousness, dyspepsia, rheumatism, kidney complaint, nervousness and debility are also ailments to the complete removal of which the Bitters long since demonstrated its adequacy.
