JOHN GRASS DYING. One of the Greatest of Sloux Chiefs Near-ing His End-Some Personal

Ing His End-Some Personal Reminiscences.

John Grass, the great chief of the Blackfeet Sioux, is seriously ill at Fort Yates, North Dakota, and is not expected to live. He has telegraphed to the Cheyenne agency for White Swan, his mother-in-law, to come to his bedside. It is alleged that herbal poison was mixed with his food by a brace of young bucks, adherents of Sitting Bull. The alleged poisoners have fied to Standing Rock, where Sitting Bull now is. The Indian medicine men and white physicians who are attending Grass have abandoned all hopes of his recovery. He is delirious most of the time.

For several years there has been much bitterness of feeling between Grass, the most progressive and intelligent of the Sioux chiefs, and Sitting Bull, who is regarded with disfavor and suspicion. Grass urged the Sioux commission to remove Sitting Bull from the reservation and imprison him. The commissioners promised sitting Bull from the reservation and imprison him. The commissioners promised to submit his recommendations with their indorsements. Fearful lest he should be removed before he had squared accounts Sitting Bull sent two of his young men to Fort Yates, it is claimed, to poison Chief Grass. Saturday night they stole two ponies belonging to the sick chief and departed in the direction of Standing Rock. If Grass dies there will be a general uprising among the Sioux that may result in the extermination of Sitting Bull and his band.

The chief whose death is now momentarily expected was one of the greatest men of the Sioux nation. He was a shrewd and of the Sioux nation. He was a shrewd and intelligent observer of events and devoted his whole life to the best interests of his tribe. John Grass is chief of the Blackfeet Sioux and supreme judge of the nation. He is about forty-seven years old, is nearly six feet tall and a perfectly formed specimen of the Indian race. In personal appearance he is a man of a singularly pleasing face, with large, dark and brilliant eyes and fine white teeth.

His manners are most suave and courtly, and he displays great tact and shrewdness.

and he displays great tact and shrewdness. He is a Christian, and dresses in white men's clothes, and takes a great pride in his appearance. His photographs are dis-played all over the Northwest, but he has steadily refused to be photographed in Indian costume. He generally wears a large overcoat and a fur cap. He still wears moccasins and keeps his hair platted. There are no Indians to-day like those so graphire no indians to-day like those so graphically described in Cooper's novels or the Indian tales that used to delight the average American school boy of thirty years ago, but John Grass comes as near to the ideal Indian of the novel, the good Indian ideal Indian of the novel, the good Indian, the noble red man, as any one of his race now living. Among the whites with whom he has come in contact he has made many firm friends. General Custer knew bim and liked him very well, and Gen. Crook was also one of his admirers.

John Grass possessed the entire confidence of his tribe, and although he was a tentile fighter in his day, his records and terrible fighter in his day his people paid equal respect to his judgments in time of peace. After the surrender of Sitting Bull and John Gall, it was decided to gradually accustom the Sloux Indians to self-government, and the officials who had the matter of the state of the self-government of the ment, and the officials who had the matter in charge agreed upon the establishment of a native court for the trial of petty offenses. John Grass was the man selected to carry out this idea and he was appointed the first judge of the nation, with power to sentence offenders on conviction of their guilt. These sentences were to be enforced if approved of by the Indian agent. This high position John Grass has held ever since and it is the testimony of Major Jax McLaughlin, the agent, that his rulings were uniformly just.

rere uniformly just. He has a small farm, which he manage with ability. He never took sides with any faction and consequently is the only one among all the chiefs who commands the entire respect and confidence of the the entire respect and confidence of the community.

Having been conquered in battle, he submitted to the inevitable. When negotiations were first opened with the Sloux he was selected in the great council to speak to the Pratt commission for the whole people. It was he who denounced Captain Pratt to his face for refusing to let a newspaper correspondent be present at their conference so that the American people could understand their claim. He always claimed that the commissioners who ple could understand their claim. He al-ways claimed that the commissioners who secured the Black Hills treaty from the Sioux made a great many misrepresenta-tions and gave promises which were never

In the beginning of the recent negotiations Grass was very much opposed to the opening of the Sloux reservation, but finally used his influence in favor of the vernment treaty, and that settled the question. It is said that attempts were made to bribe him to consent to the treaty, but he indignantly rejected all such offers and only yielded when he saw that the whites would take their lands anyway, and then he attempted to get the best terms he could. From time to time he has given the government very valuable hints as to the proper way to advance the interests of the Sioux. In an interview recently he said: "Our future depends on the schools. If they are properly conducted my people will advance rapidly and take their place side by side with the whites. We expect our children to be citizens. The old people are ignorant and know very little. Indian are children to be citizens. The old people are ignorant and know very little. Indian government is passing away. The tribal relations are failing. Everything is tending to the white man's ways. Some day we will elect our children to speak for us in Dakota and in Congress. We would sooner elect some one of our own race than to have a stranger repretus. When our children are educated they will be bonest to us. They will read the newspapers and find out what is going on. Each will think for himself and my people will not run after one man like a flock of sheep.

"In our own way we can govern our selves now. Our judgment is good enough, but our education is poor. As far as any-but our education is poor. As far as anything concerns ourselves we are smart enough to protect our interests when we understand the facts. If two men were put up for us to vote for we could select a man who would best represent us. We selected a man to talk to the Pratt commission, and we can just as well select a man to talk in the house of the Great Father at Washing-ton. It would help the Indians if they could vote. We were tested this summer. sould vote. We were tested this They gave us the right to examine our own minds as to whether we would sign own minds as to whether we would sign the red treaty or the black treaty. We would sign neither. Some were in favor of it and some were opposed to it. All were allowed to do as they saw it. Right in the council I was accused of holding back the people from signing the treaty, I denied it. Three times I called upon my people in the council to say what the would do, and every time they refused. "We are learning to practise self-government now. On any question affecting the whole tribe we meet and agree on what whole tribe we meet and agree to be ought to be done, and we take a vote, yes or no, just as white men do. We understand that we are not strong enough to fight the white men for our rights. The time for wars is past. The Sioux will never go on the warpath again. If injustice is done to us we will protest and keep asking for justice till we get it."

In the death of John Grass the Sioux nation will lose its most gifted statesman and a truly eloquent orator. BURNED TO THE GROUND.

Pennsylvania Railroad Pump House Destroyed by Fire Saturday Night. On the Mt. Joy branch of the Pennsylvania railroad, about a mile west of Diller ville, there is a trough from which through trains take water, while running. The trough hes between the rails and is kept full from a large tank in which the water is pumped from Landis run near Saturday evening the house, in which the pump was kept, was totally destroyed by fire. The building was 40 feet long, 15 wide and 20 in height. When the fire broke out Gilman Foltz, night engineer, was at the end of the water tank about two hundred yards from the pump house. In short time he saw burst out of the building. He had left the house but a few minutes before and hastened back. The fire made such rapid progress that he was unable to go inside of the house to secure some of his clothes which he had left within. Among these was a vest in which was a valuable watch, and it was destroyed. It was not long until the building was burned and nothing was left but the foundation walls. The tire is supposed to have originated from the explosion of a barrel of oil that stood an the building. While it was tu progress Harrisburg Express, west, came along. Engineer Foltz was afraid that the botlers might explode while the train was passing. He flagged it, causing a stop and delay of fateen minutes. The boiler and engine is the building were badly damaged and the loss will probably be about $500.

THE GOGEBIC STAGE ROBBER.

He Acknowledges His Identity and Boasts of His Exploits. Holzhay, the Gogebic stage robber, was on Sunday turned over to the sheriff of Gogebic county, who reached Marquette, Mich., on Sunday morning, accompanied Mich., on Sunday morning, accompanied by a strong posse and persons whose presence was required for the purpose of identifying the prisoner. Among these latter is the driver of the stage that was held up when Fleichbein was shot and robbed. The Gogebic sheriff left with his prisoner on the west-bound South Shore train at 5½ o'clock Sunday evening. The prisoner was sullen and defiant, his demeanor showing him to be ready for any desperate deed that would give him death or liberty, and if not securely kept there is danger that he will yet effect his escape. When he was brought to the station to take the train there was an immense crowd gathered there to get a glimpse of him. As they crowded about the officer who had him in charge the prisoner scowled and said:

"If I had my guns and was free you fellows wouldn't be so anxious to get close to me."

to me."

He refused to talk concerning his exploit to any but Officers Glode and Weisel, who captured him, but to these he made a statement last night while they were with him in the jail in which he admitted that he is the man who went through the Minnesota & Northwestern train between Maple Valley and Ellis Junction, last May, and a Wisconsin Central train in August, besides having held up several stage coaches in Northern Wisconsin during the past six months, and committed nustage coaches in Northern Wisconsin during the past six months, and committed nu-merous other small robberies. He was at once recognized by the driver of the Goge-bic stage as the man who had halted and fired on the stage, and he recognized the driver in turn. He rather facetiously in-quired of the driver if he had been hurt in the affray, and seemed pleased to hear that
