Filtering Our Water.

The account which we printed yesterterday of the method resorted to for the surpose of securing clean water for the Carnegie furnaces at Pittsburg should be read with interest here, where a like blem confronts the city. There an ron cylinder was sunk alongside the river, some twenty-eight feet deep, until its perforated bottom entered a bed of mand ; from which a supply of filtered river water is expected to constantly flow tato the receiver, to be then pumped into the distributing tanks.

This is precisely what we want to accomplish here ; and if a natural bed of sand can be struck alongside the Conestoga at the water works, we will be able to secure a cheap and easy filtering of the water we pump into our reservoirs by simply sinking an iron tank or cistern to receive the filtered water, and inserting into it the pipes that supply the pumps ; instead of running their ends out into the muddy creek. And if we do not have any such natural sand bed into which to sink our supply tank we need to make one ; which may be readily done, though of course at more cost than if it was supplied by nature. All that we need to do is to make a sufficiently large excavation and fill it on the creek side with filtering grave and sand. It is a very customary way of getting clear water, and an inexpensive one. It certainly will pay the city to provide some means of clearing the water it pumps into the reservoirs, if it saves nothing more thereby than the cost of pumping up and afterwards cleaning out the mud, bich now provides so large a percent-3 of its pumpage. May we not hope hat councils have been so impressed she quantity of mud that they have the to our citizens for water, and tou ed by the wickedness of this fraud that they will at least her this fraud they will at least be inclined to send for expert advice as to the manner and the cost of filtering the water before it is pumped into the reservoirs ; always, however, avoiding the agents and experts of the patent filters, who propose to turn sewer water into the purest beverage, and by promising so much lead us justly to distrust the value of their entire performance, save to their own pockets.

Marvelous Patience. The Philadelphia Times does not understand wherefore the attorney general and the lieutenant governor should so correctly read the imperative instruction of the constitution that the senatorial vacancy in Delaware county should be filled by a special election, while overlooking a like mandate as to Lancaster county, where also a vacancy exists, but where the lieutenant governor has refused his warrant for an election. The Times compositor makes it to re-vacancy here as that caused by the death of Senator Lehman instead Senator Stehman; which inspires us to offer it our sympathy since we are so often ourselves the victims of a like abominable obscurity of intelligence in the composing room, that must needs be endured since it is too late to be mended. The patience that enables us to live under such exacerbations of life as these that are infilicted upon us by the stupidor malice of compositors and lieutenant governors, has a marvellous quality of endurance; for just think how Pennsylvania has endured, for ages almost, the Republican rule that has constantly played these tricks upon the people, in perpetuating its power, and that has grown so careless in their exhibition as really not to care about explaining the rossest inconsistencies ; such as that involved, for instance, in this different treatment of Chester and Lancaster counties. The political fortunes of the ruling Republican dynasty was to be elped by a Chester and hurt by a Lancaster election ; so it was ordered only where it was wanted. Whether the people are yet disposed to endure such cavalier treatment we do not know. The election will tell certainly; but the anti-election disputes between Republican factions and their contests in the counties for supremacy, offer a good hope that the long Repub lican reign is about over ; a conclusion which the domination of the party by be drunken and thoroughly rotten Quay naturally promotes.

The Owls Conclusion.

The wisdom of the street committee has evolved the conclusion that the repugnant official grades of the Duke street sidewalks and roadways will be properly accommodated by raising the sidewalks at the expense of the city. Wherefore the city should not rather lower the roadway, which it is its particular province to build and repair, we are not advised ; but it may be that the awe and veneration with which members of the committee regard the street railway-in which, of course, none of them can possibly be pecuniarily interested may account for their unwillingness to disturb the grade upon which it reposes ; as it is all we have to account for the tender consideration habitually shown the street railways; which poor, dividendless, generally abused things have only the bosom of the street committee to fiee to for fondling.
