LANCASTER, PA., September 28, 1890.

A Good Agreement.

The agreement entered into between the chairmen of the political parties in this county is very well done if it is faithfully observed. It would be properly supplemented by an agreement not to employ poll committees, and generally to observe the letter and spirit of the laws which undertake to provide for the casting of a free and unobstructed ballot.

China may have a chance to order American miners out of that country.

A rich gold-bearing quartz ledge on a high and long thirty feet thick has been discovered in China not far from the city of Canton. The discovery was made five months ago but kept quiet, and a number of Chinese merchants organized a company and employed American experts to examine the ledge and assay the ore, which is said to yield more than one hundred and seventy-five dollars a ton.

The Czar's Farm.

The peaceful repose of European affairs is ruffled only by the ceaseless newsy breezes from the mysterious land of the czar. Russia is to build at once another strategic railway to the German frontier, and with characteristic extravagance has ordered material and locomotives in large quantities, while the minister of finance groans horribly.

England a company is being organized to build a thirty-five million dollar ship canal from the Firth of Forth to the Firth of Clyde.

Somehow the British seem to think it a fearful labor to sail around their little island, though they have been by no means eager to build the canals that avoid sailing around continents.

The Philadelphia Inquirer is an enterprise newspaper, and under the new management has developed greatly.

There is such a thing as being too ambitious in newspaper work; which it will illustrate when it undertakes to tell all about that sad accident to Captain Jones, of Pittsburgh, in a special dispatch dated in that town, but carefully prepared in its office; a fact which it let us know, in undertaking an elaborate explanation of the way in which the more fluid steel exceeds in burning capacity the slower iron.

Private Dabzell writes a characteristic letter to the private wanner.

It displays the private wanner in his naked folly, but it assures the corporal that the letter which he received from his friend with a request to keep it to himself, he published at the demand of his family, to show how he himself had been abused by the administration which had promised to make him deputy something; and he assures the corporal that his friendship for him had been thoroughly rewarded by the opportunity he had afforded him, in the publication of this letter, of making known to the world his "Dabzell" wrongs.

Lancaster County Farmers.

The price of wheat is going up in the Chicago market, and it is very natural course for it to take. Wheat is abnormally low and cannot, without remain at its present price. There is much more room for it to rise than to fall, and the farmer will take little risk in holding it.

age, which in this country is now pretty fully employed.

It looks as though the reward of the farmer was to be greater in the future, in this section at least, than it has been. The price of land has fallen to a figure at which, in the judgment of careful observers, it is cheaper than the Western land, and which, though manure is unimproved with good buildings, and depend upon a single product, in some places corn, in others wheat; and has not the variety of crops to fall back upon, in case of the failure of one, that we have, in our diverse grains, tobacco and roots.

When corn fails there is a famine in Kansas, and when wheat fails, in Minnesota; but there is never a famine in Lancaster county.

Even seventy cent wheat does no more than make the farmer grow, for he raises all that he needs to consume and has so many other crops and products besides wheat to give him a chance to smile when he sums up his accounts for the year. He does not have all his eggs in one basket, and he has a good market at his door, which he attends and where he easily turns his produce into cash.

Money Joy has a Board of Trade.

Once upon a time Lancaster had an organization of this kind, and it is rumored that traces of it are still to be found. The Lancaster county schoolship in the School of Industrial Art should be taken promptly. The importance of art in the industries is becoming more marked yearly and the training given in the Philadelphia school must prove of value to the graduates and the commonwealth.
