ADDRESS, THE INTELLIGENCER. Lancaster, Ps.

LANCASTER, PA., October 15, 1889.

Snags in the Law.

The supreme court decides that the law which has been supposed to take from the county treasury the damages awarded for taking land in opening city streets, and from the city treasury only the damages awarded for the houses and ovements upon the land, does in fact take the land damages from the county treasury, but requires the city to pay them back to the county when they exceed the amount contributed by the city to the making of roads and bridges in the county ; the opinion of the su-preme court being that the amount received by the county treasury from city taxation for road purposes was intended by the law to be applied by the county to the payment of the land damages in opening city streets and that this was to be the extent of the county's responsibility.

That may have been the intent of the law; but it is not expressed in its language, as the supreme court finds; but it declares that the word "county" is printed in one place where it should be "city," and that this correction makes the land damages payable to the county out of the city treasury, after the amount it has contributed to the county treasury is exhausted. This change the supreme court finds necessary to make the law read sensibly; and it seems to be right in this conclusion; but it runs against a snag in making the correction, since it creates a contradiction to the previous section in the law, which requires the damages to be paid out of the county treasury and only the damages for improvements out of the city treasury. The supreme court settles this difficulty by declaring that the land damages in the first place are payable by the county in all cases; which then shall recover from the city the amount it pays in excess of the road tax contributed by the city to the county treasury. That is one way to get out of the snarl, but it will be seen that it requires the court to strike across the plain declaration of the law which, as it reads it, declares that "the street opening damages in the city, while the balance on said account is against the city shall be payable out of the treasury of said city." The court declares that they shall first be paid out of the treasury of the county; and it leaves the county in an embarrassing position. It requires it to pay the city's debt and to invite the city to return it the money. But it does not appear that there is any time stated in the law when this settlement between the city and the county shall take place. The law reads that the city "shall be reimbursable out of the county treas ury only when the balance shall be In favor of said city." This seemingly contemplates that the city has become the creditor of the county and three years and three days. From this it would appear that the temperate drinkers are the longest lived and the total abstainers fixes the time when the county may be the shortest lived, even the sots excelling apon by it to pay up. preme cuurt, however, holds that the county must pay in the first place. But there does not seem to be any time fixed for the city to refund to the county any sum that the county has paid in excess of its liability. The county is required to keep an account with the city and charge or credit the sums contributed and received by the city ; and the contemplation would seem to be that it should stop paying the city land damages after its credit was exhausted ; but this the supreme court says it has no right to do, but must keep on paying. We cannot help thinking that these are rather hard lines for the county; and that it would have been a good deal more healthy for its treasury if the sureme court had not found that it was cessary for it to advance this money to the city. We are inclined to think that the city commands the situation. The county has to pay the damages for the opening of the city's streets ; and the city may be reasonably easy about the need of refunding the money. The county's claim upon her is limited to the past six years ; and when she comes to collect for that time, it may be that she will need a valider haw to stand on than this contradictory and insensible one which the supreme court has had to alter to read ; and with its alteration does not succeed in avoiding its contradiction.

Criticising the Yesuvins.

In a number of interviews with naval officers the New York Herald finds considerable doubt as to the effectiveness of the new dynamite cruiser in a sea fight, but dismisses these unfavorable opinions with the statement that the navy is slow to adopt novelties, and that even Admiral Farragut gave his ironclads no part in action, surrounding the armored Tennessee with wooden ships, while three ironclads were idle on-lookers. This is not a fair statement. The Tennessee surrounded herself by steaming right into the middle of the Union fleet, and the admiral attacked her by ramming with his wooden steam frigates because they were the heaviest and best suited for such work. The monitors were so unwieldly and low in the water that if used as rams they would probably have gone to the bottom. They used their guns when they could do so without danger to the rest of the fleet, but under the circumstances the safest and best course was that successfully adopted by Farragut-rapid and furious butting by the powerful wooden steamers.

As for the naval criticism of the Vesuvius it is not directed against dynamite guns in general but simply calls atten-tion to the limits to the power of the Vesuvius, for which there is a disposition to make extravagant claims. The insectivacy and short range of her guns ground that she does not need to hit an may but only to drop a shell somewhere near him, and that she is swift enough to get to close quarters rapidly. Naval officers may be pardoned some iness as to what may happen while he Vesuvius is getting to her fighting range, and as the guns have to be aimed by turning the wholeship, in which they are rigidly fixed, they may even feel un-cortain of their ability to drop a dynaite shell anywhere near an enemy who meanwhile hurling steel projectiles against their very explosive cruiser. The avnamite cruiser may be a great little he average life of the tectotaler by some two years. It would be interesting to see this inquiry extended so as to show the value of the figures, for it might happen that another odd four thousand would give very different results. Class two, described as, "habitual temperate drinkers,-those who consume a moderate amount of alcoholic liquors," might be expected to stand at the head of the five classes when ranked by length of life, but just what the commission considers "a moderate amount of liquor" is not explained.

FOUR Swinomish Indians are under arrest at Seattle, Washington Territory, for having murdered the medicine man of the tribe. There had been a good deal of sickness, and it is the custom with these savages to hold their doctor responsible with his life for the public health. In some cases it might not be a bad idea to apply the Indian practice in civilization.

YOUNG MR. RILEY, of Chippewa Falls, is setting the world on fire in the vicinity of the University of Wisconsin. He is a freshman and has taken pains to arouse the wrath of the sophomores and when they tried to haze him he opened fire with a large navy revolver. Soon after a party of hazers found him unarmed and tried to cut his hair with a pair of tinner's shears. Riley screamed murder so vigorously that neighbors and passersby came to the rescue. He was taken before the municipal court and the judge labored for several hours to get from him the names of his assailants, but with schoolboy logic Mr. Riley intimated that he would never be so mean as to get his tormentors into trouble with the authorities. He was released and soon after was seen walking to the university with a heavy rifle on his shoulder. A suspicion is beginning to arise that Mr. Riley may be a little too " fresh " for hazing.
