The Societies Assemble.

The Democratic societies of the state in convention assembled at Philadelphia appear to have had a very agreeable meeting, and to have accomplished the object of their gathering, which we suppose was to make one another's acquaintance, show that they were aroused and have good time. They passed some resolutions, heard some speeches, ate some dinners and made an appearance before the public which advised it of the fact that the Democratic societies existed and were in a very lively and healthy condition, ready for work and eager to battle. In fact they advertised rather than to have a fight at all; and strange to say it was so distinguished a Democrat as Samuel J. Randall whom they picked out for the point of their spears, even reported that some one said, "He is no Democrat"; to which another replied "You are a liar."

Perhaps the better reply would have been "You are very ignorant and very silly" for the man who said that Mr. Randall was not a Democrat might really have been too stupid to know differently. To be sure, it is hard to imagine that any one could be so ignorant as not to know the political position of so old, constant and distinguished a Democrat as Mr. Randall; who has been the wheel horse of the party during all his active life; who has given it all his thought and labor; who has had no other devotion and knelt at no other shrine. If Mr. Randall is not a Democrat, who is?

But it is possible that the rash young man, who thought he was not, may have been malicious and weak enough to want Mr. Randall to be out of the party, and to think that he could put him there by saying so. It would be a phenomenal self-conceit that would have this conception; but there is no doubt that there are phenomenally self-conceited men, and there may be some of them in the Democratic societies. And there are men who habitually let their feelings run away with their judgment; and there are others who have no judgment to run away with. The man who could put Mr. Randall out of the Democratic party is sorely afflicted in one of these ways. Mr. Randall's offense, in his eyes, we suppose to be his position upon the tariff, which some excited young Democrats want to knock on the head right away; and they want to knock in the head right away, too, every one who stands in the way of their enterprising effort. If they do not make more headway in slaying the tariff than in slaying Randall, it is not likely to feel very sorely the effect of their attacks. They are very light weights indeed. Tariff reform would halt and rot by the roadside if it had the better engine to pull it out of the mud.

Farm Products and the World's Fair. One strong reason for the choice of the western metropolis for the world's fair is the fact that our exports are almost confined to our agricultural products, and that the party in power gives no hope that the tariff may be so revised as to permit any extensive development of foreign trade in other lines. However excellent our manufacturers there is little chance under the existing laws of increasing our exports of any but agricultural products, and the great agricultural west, not the manufacturing east, is the section to run away with. This is the more important because it has been the policy and unscrupulous practice of European agricultural societies and butchers to defame American agricultural products. A few months ago Commercial Agent Bramlette stated that it would be impossible to notice all the libelous and misleading articles in German newspapers concerning American agricultural products. Numberless pamphlets on the matter are printed every year by German agricultural societies containing a few facts and much falsehood. If foreigners are drawn to a great fair at Chicago all these slanders must be silenced or at least muffled. By the journey westward visitors must be impressed not only with our huge resources, but with the beautiful conditions surrounding American live stock, contrasting strongly with the practice in some parts of crowded Europe. Alarmed at the growth of American trade Germany attacked the reputation of the American hog, and export figures show that he is just beginning to recover from the blow. Over in Germany, and in fact all over Europe meat is regarded as a great luxury by the poor, and some only taste it on festive occasions. A world fair at Chicago can not fail to call general attention to the excellence and abundance of our provisions, and the leading masses will look with a favor upon legislation that prevents them from sharing in our abundance. An enlightened tariff policy might force Europe to take more of our products, agricultural and mechanical, in exchange for raw materials and things that we can not make, but as there is no immediate hope of such reform we must do what we can to persuade foreigners to look with more favor upon the only strong crutch of our lame foreign commerce, the product of the farms. The most effective part of our world's fair from a business point of view must be agricultural, and hardly any one will venture to maintain that New York is a better place than Chicago for an agricultural fair. A vast majority of the visitors to the fair may care nothing for the agricultural display, but a world's fair is supposed to be held with a view to an effect upon foreign commerce as well as for the amusement and instruction of visitors. Chicago could give both, while a fair in New York would be simply a grand bazaar for the benefit of European merchants and manufacturers.

Better Late Than Never. We are glad to see that the lieutenant governor has at length permitted himself to be convinced that Lancaster county is as well entitled to be represented in the Senate as is Delaware county, and that there is no law requiring a Delaware county election for senator that does not equally call for a Lancaster county election. We regret that the lieutenant governor has left the non-nomination of his constituency to so late a date that our Republican fellow citizens will hardly be able to hold a primary election to determine their choice of a candidate. They doubtless feel like kicking themselves that they did not show the independence and wisdom of their Democratic brethren, who read the plain law for themselves, and acted on it by nominating long ago their candidate for senator. All Republican fellow citizens will be able now to realize how foolish it has been in them to rely upon the wisdom of the lieutenant governor, which has failed them so utterly and left them without a candidate with the election but three weeks off; and he no doubt is mourning that he let the politicians of his party keep him so long from doing a duty that was so plain that in the eleventh hour he was compelled to do it. It will be wise in the Republicans of the Northern district to maintain their consistency and avoid trouble by making no nominations. Let their ambitious young men who want to be senators step out and try their metal in a scrub race for the election; and if the result should be the election of the Democratic candidate, a good man will be chosen and no harm done.

September exports of beef, hog and dairy products were valued at $8,706,549, about two millions more than the value of the same exports in September of 1888. The dairy products show a decreased export of about a hundred thousand, and the increase is in bacon, hams, fresh and cured beef and tallow. In addition to this the exports of live cattle reached a value of two million eight hundred thousand, or nearly three times the value of the exports for the same month of 1888. Over four thousand independent American pigs went abroad alive in September, and their value was over thirty-one thousand dollars, more than five times the value of the hog emigration of September, 1888. If this sort of thing continues Bismarck may soon feel called upon to make another attack upon the great American hog, but he can hardly renew his criticism of several years ago, as the motive for the German slaughter of our pork and pigs has gradually been recognized even in Germany. That country ranks next to the United States as a hog producing land, and it was hoped that the embargo put upon our product, and the basing of that action upon an assertion that American meat was unhealthy, would destroy our supremacy. The trick was successful for a time, but it is pleasing to see our hogs again forging to the front.

The Mexicans seem to be very sulky since Secretary Windom's order about importing live ones. Mr. William Cooper, a Texan, who operates only quarries in Mexico, says that before Windom's order there had been a wonderfully warm sentiment growing up for Americans. "Every thing was a la Americaine. Now you never hear the expression except to deride some petty or mean. It completely ruined the great industry, and it is a pity that upon it as so unjust that there is a disposition to boycott everything American." When that traveling congress of American nations finally gets down to work Mexico may show temper, but that country is now drawing so much European capital that it may get along very well without any commercial assistance. Englishmen are building a road across the isthmus on the line surveyed for Eads' ship railway, and a road is being rapidly pushed into the mineral regions of the Southwest. It is believed by Mexicans that the completion of the road will have an effect upon the country similar to that of the California gold fever on the United States.

THREE wealthy New Yorkers, Messrs. Phelps, Carey and Chanler, have gone to hunt lions in Africa. The last two are nephews of John Jacob Astor. "Their outfit will be the largest, with the exception of Stanley's when he started for the Congo, that ever penetrated the Dark Continent. Messrs. Carroll and Chanler two years ago made a trip north from Cape Town through the Transvaal, and have shot every species of big game except lions. The party expects to leave Zanzibar about January 1, and make its way into the interior, ranging north and west toward Lake Victoria Nyanza, passing through the Masai country, which is said to abound not only in warlike tribes, but in elephants, rhinoceros and lions. The trip will occupy about eight months." It is hoped they will write a book for the delight of the American small boy, as otherwise the expedition can be of little service to humanity.

AND now it appears that George P. Maris, of whose downward course and suicide the great dailies have had much to say, did not commit suicide, but accidentally killed himself by the entrance of a chloroform for toothache. The letters found in his pockets, and in some of the reports made the basis for scandal, were from his sisters. A man on the downward course may expect to be hurried along, but the modern correspondent appears to take delight in kicking him into his grave.

A REMARKABLE CASE. A Suit in Which His Children Are Defendants. A remarkable case was filed in the circuit court at Indianapolis on Monday, the plaintiff being Louis Linn and the defendants his children. The suit was instituted to set aside the will of Lizzie Huggins, formerly the wife of the plaintiff, and by reason of whose infidelity he was driven to commit murder. The complaint alleges that Linn and Lizzie Huggins entered into an agreement at Quincy, Ill., in 1857, to live together, and that four children were born to them, and that in March, 1868, they were legally wedded.

In 1871, while living in Indianapolis, Mrs. Linn brought suit for divorce in the Floyd circuit court, and when the sheriff went there to serve the summons on her husband she contrived to take him away from home, and she destroyed the papers. Six months later she received a decree of divorce with custody of her children, but she kept the fact concealed from Linn for two years, though living with him all the time. In 1873 Linn found himself supplanted by his supposed wife's children, and he was obliged to sue for their return. Police Officer Minnick, and one evening he shot Minnick dead. Shortly thereafter Linn was arrested, and after Mrs. Linn died, leaving a large property to her children, in January, 1883, Linn, then nearly 70 years of age, was pardoned, but before leaving the prison he was told of the divorce proceedings 10 years before by a guard at the prison, whose father, Judge Davis, had granted the decree. When Linn was set at liberty, an estate was settled up, and all the proceeds passed into the hands of the children, who are now made defendants.

TAKING OUT TEETH IN TEXAS. A Cowboy Dentist Who Used a Mallet for an Anesthetic. From the New York Star. Henry Dixey says that he was once playing in a small Texas town during his early days, and having suffered from a tooth with an aching tooth, at last decided to have it out. On inquiry he learned that the only dentist in the town was an alleged Indian doctor, whose office was in a tent on the outskirts of the town. The fellow was an Indian in all respects, however, for in reality he was a type of the untamed cowboy of the plains.

"My tooth has been paining me dreadfully," began Dixey, as he seated himself on the camp stool in the tent, "and I want you to give me ether, doctor." "Ether," roared the cowboy dentist, as he sawing a huge wooden mallet around his head. "Ether be blowed; we stin 'em here."

CARL SCHURE'S ADDRESS.

He Talks to the Forestry Congress on the Importance of Trees. At the eighth annual meeting of the American Forestry Congress in Philadelphia on Friday, Hon. Carl Schure said he was heart and soul with the object of the Forestry Congress, and that he was a result of a conviction formed while in public life—that the destruction of the forests of the country will be the murder of its future prosperity and its progress. This was no mere figure of speech or rhetorical exaggeration. "My heart sickens," he said, "when I see the indiscriminate destruction going on now, and when I think of the waste for generations." The lumberman, the settler and the timber thief waste more than they make use of, and a public opinion based on unimpaired wisdom was the only remedy. He described the indignation he aroused among congressmen and lumbermen when he had attempted, while in office, to prevent timber stealing. At last, however, he believed the voice of reason would be heard. The people were beginning to be aroused to the danger that threatens if the forests are destroyed. The preservation of the forests in the mountains was a most pressing necessity. Where forests covered mountains, particularly at the headwaters of the great rivers, the government should possess itself of them, and where they had the private ownership of the state the nation should endeavor to regain control of them. If these were cut and the soil washed down the mountain sides, the valleys would be flooded in time of great rains, and the rivers would become shallow or dried up altogether.

If the destruction of the forests went on for 25 years longer, the United States would be as completely stripped of their forests as Asia Minor. It would be a privilege to-day that believes in eating, drinking and being merry, not caring for the morrow. This had to be overcome, and would be the only way to save ourselves. He wished all success to the association's object.

A Verdict For James Webb vs. the firm of Lees & Sons, of Bridgeport, for wages alleged to be due on a contract, a jury in Norristown on Tuesday returned a verdict of $1,202.90 for plaintiff. Webb is the man who the Lees were alleged to have employed in London under contract and brought to this country. The jury were prosecuted some time ago in the United States court, in Philadelphia. In the present suit the contract was not denied by the Lees, but the only question being as to whether they were bound to pay him $1 a week for the entire term of the contract, six months, or for the period only for which he was actually engaged at their mills.
