Harrison Surrenders.

Harrison has fallen before the fire of the politicians and brought confusion upon those who undertook to figure him as a defender of the doctrine of civil service reform upon the strength of his alleged stand in favor of retaining until the expiration of their terms Democratic officeholders against whom nothing was alleged but their Democracy.

The Ledger, which has been a staunch believer in the president's virtue, is dumfounded at his action, and asks what possible good can come from the removal of Postmaster Harry when in a few weeks more he might have made it consistently with his avowed principles.

There is no doubt of that. It is made so plain that he who runs may read. The postmaster general makes the feeble excuse that the new postmaster will not be able to take his place much before the expiration of Mr. Harry's four years term.

They do not believe it. They wanted it only as a sign of the president's surrender to them. They now carry him along in captive chains behind their triumphal car.

This Philadelphia postmaster has thrown a bright light upon the character and conduct of Harrison's administration. It has illustrated vividly a contest with the Republican politicians in which the honor of the administration has finally fallen.

Our Girls Abroad. A very dramatic and circumstantial story is published by the New York World concerning the breaking of the engagement of Miss Caldwell, the American heiress, to Prince Murat.

This story is evidently a very lopsided bit of fiction and various corrections, revisions and denials must be counted on, but it is an interesting tale, for all that, because it is based on that most disgusting fact—the eagerness of many very wealthy American girls to marry little foreign princes.

being a constitutional disease cannot be cured by local applications. It requires a constitutional remedy like Hood's Sarsaparilla, which strikes directly at its cause by removing all impurities from the blood, building up the diseased tissues and giving healthy tone to the whole system.

Do you hear that Camel Hair Dress Goods is scarce? Ask in a New York store; ask dealers almost anywhere. The finer grades can hardly be had.

Take the Camel Hair Borders. Heavy to shagginess or light to mild roughness, or even the few scattered hairs that seem to be rather than are.

Plain solid color Camel Hairs crowd another long counter. You may have choice of half a dozen qualities, the meanest fit for anybody's wear.

Black Camel Hair stuffs are legion. Ask for any worthy weave or quality.

As fast as they come we put the newest Books on a table by themselves—one or two of a kind.
