NOTICE TO SUBSCRIBERS—Remit by check

ADDRESS, THE INTELLIGENCER,

LANCASTER, PA., November 1, 1889.

The People Rule, Not the Paupers. The Democratic committee of Philadelphia has determined to challenge at the coming election the votes of those whose tax receipts have been taken out by the Republican committee. Twenty thousand of such receipts have been ssued to that committee, notwithscanding the fact that the Philadelphia court has declared that the suffrage require-ment that the voter shall have paid a tax is not satisfied unless such tax has been paid by himself. This construc-tion is well grounded. A man's tax may be discharged by another, but it by no means follows that when the tax is paid, the right to vote is obtained. This qualification was not made in order to secure tax revenue, but it was obviously based upon the opinion t at a citizen who is not willing to pay a tax of the smallest amount is not worthy of the voting franchise. The distinct require-ment is made that he shall have paid a tax, and certainly he does not pay it when someone else pays it for him. There is not a substantial compliance with the requirement when the voter does not himself pay the tax and so signify that he is willing to make some sacrifice to obtain the right to vote. And there is a strong reason in morals and good government for demanding the voter himself shall have paid a tax, as is clear from the admitted abuse and wrong that is perpetrated in the wholesale taking out of tax receipts by party committees. The practice is indefensible. It cannot be defended on the ground of humanity, and as a relief to the deserving voter from an oppressive imposition, since the tax which he is asked for as a condition of suffrage is but twenty-five cents, which sum any one not a pauper can easily pay. And the people of the state have just passed their opinion upon the question of the propriety of this suffrage requirement in more emphatic way, by defeating with an overwhelming majority a constitu-tional amendment which proposed to efface it from the fundamental law. They declared that it should stay there; and the only reason for their decision was their feeling that it was a just requirement that the man who wished to vote showed that he held the privilege in some esteem by voting the small tax levied upon it.

The act of the Republican committee of Philadelphia in taking out twenty thousand tax receipts after this decided expression of popular opinion, and after the just construction of the constitution by the Philadelphia courts, is a brazen defiance of the law and the popular judgment. The Democratic committee did right in refusing to pay for tax receipts, and will do their simple duty in challenging all voters who claim the franchise upon the strength of these committee-bought receipts; which are d against the demand of the tax collector, but invalid against that of the election officer. In a democracy the people rule, but not the paupers. The man who has the will to work can always spare from his income twenty-five cents a year for the public treasury ; and the imbecility that cannot compass such a tax is not worthy of the manly suffrage.

Trust and Vigilance. "Another cashier gone wrong" is the news cry of the day, and the fallen bank official in this case seems to have been distinguished to a remarkable degree by all those qualities that inspire confidence and respect. Mr. Cresson is described as an active man of business with no vices. He was devoted to his family, active in the church, and the breath of scandal had never touched his name. Of course the usual garrulous "friend" is on hand with the stale remark that be is not surprised and has suspected something for several years, but from all the testimony it appears that an ideal cashier has fallen; one whom the whole business community of his place of residence relied upon with natural and perfect confidence. There will be much comment now on directors who do not direct, and on the criminal negligence of permitting the most honest of men to work unwatched in positions of trust. The criticism is just and can not be escaped. All men in positions of the kind should be watched and the most honest men will demand the most rigid surveillance in order that the faintest breath of suspicion may have no chance to rise. But in its practical application this business theory is selm developed to perfection and even when it is we sometimes find that a rascal will elude with ease the most rigid system of checks and guards upon his honesty. Some men have a genius for making crooked books seem straight and for telling lies with truthful figures. Men must rely upon their fellow men.

After all the sense of security comes not from the most scientific system of bookkeeping or of watching, but from knowedge of the character of the man trusted, and it is remarkable that trust of this kind is so seldom betrayed. Frauds and defalcations are discovered daily in some part of the world, but there are many thousand daily proving worthy of the confidence placed in them. It rarely happens that the men who go wrong are of the kind inspiring confidence by private character. The wolf in sheepskin usually shows some of his own fur. In the case considered he does not seem to have done so, but the clumsy forts to hide his fraud in the books indicate that he had no genius for villainy, and should have been discovered by the ordinary safe-guards and scrutiny of the iness. Watch all, trust some, and remember that he who dislikes scrutiny invites suspicion.

Strolling Cheats.

Our town is cumbered with some strolling cheats calling themselves doctors, who should be invited to the jail. They are not registered as physicians and pay no license, and advertise a free gift of their services to the poor, for whom they lie in wait in their lair with big bottles of panacea that they sell at big prices to help along in their humanitarian mis-sion. Their services are free, but their decocions costly. It is surprising always to find how readily the ailing bite at the promises of cure, which are seductively spread out before them in glowing advertisements. It seems that there always will be plenty of people who are stupid enough to believe anything that is told them that they want to believe; but it does not seem that they should be so stupid as to run after the force advice, accompanied by costly the free advice, accompanied by costly bottles, of strolling fellows of whom they know nothing. That these charlatans have plenty of victims is however very eviden.. They would not be in the business if it did not pay them. These miserable dupes are perhaps hardly worthy of the protection of the law; yet it is distressing to see such transparent fraud successful.

Apropos of the terrible experience of the castaways from the steamer Earnmoor, the Philadelphia Press proposes to take the opinions of its readers whether it is right or wrong for people who are starving to eat their fellow creatures. The question is a somewhat ghastly and difficult one. As the vast majority of us are not likely to have to solve that question, it will be much more pertinent to take a vote that the trusts and combines on land, which are not starving, have no right to eat their fellow creatures, the common people.—Pittsburg Dispatch.

Both the Press and Dispatch are organs of the Republican party, the party which of the Republican party, the party which believes trusts private and legitimate affairs. The Dispatch is just as organic as the Philadelphia windbag on the tariff question. On the trust situation its opinions are not agreeable to its party contemporaries. The Disputch's proposition to fee the public pulse concerning its attitude toward trusts is not noticed by the Press. In 1892 the cry of Democrats will be: "Crush the Trusts!" And there will be a spontaneous rally to that slogan. The Press and its kind can not gain advantage for the Republican party by defending trusts. The operations of trusts are being understood by the masses. Discussion will enlighten them. Let the Press begin by antagonizing the arguments presented by the Hon. William L. Wilson, extracts of whose excellent articles on trusts and monopolies have appeared in the INTELLI-

the division of the Pacific, has been in the habit of startling the country now and then on the subject of defenses, but his latest effort quite oclipses all before it. In his annual reports he calls attention to the fact that there is not a single gun in position to protect the cities of Puget sound and the commercial interest of the Northwest. "With all our boasted intelligence and pride of institutions, inventive genius, superiority in many of the arts, industries and commercial enterprises, we are as far behind in the modern appliances of war as the people of China or Japan." A board of officers was appointed by Gen. Miles to examine the entire coast, "It is estimated to put this coast in a proper condition of defense," says Gen. Miles, "would require 573 modern guns and mortars, with their proper carriage and ammunition. Their estimated cost would be $30,-967,950. Plants for the manufacture of these should be established on the Pacific coast." To this end the general recommends one appropriation of $250,000 to secure the titles to strategic points necessary, another of $1,000,000 to establish a plant, and a third of $25,000,000, or as much as can be expended in four years, for providing guns and material required on the coast. This may seem like a large sum. but the general calls attention to the fact that in the mint of San Francisco there lie $25,000,000 silver dollars alone piled up as a temptation to any third-rate naval power

Wz are only three days from the election and it is high time for voters to determine whether the state shall continue in the power of bosses who have abused the trust placed in them and treated with contempt the appeal for ballot reform treasury reform and tax reform.

THE Republicans of this county are determined not to be caught napping and have issued circulars calling upon the faithful to turn out and vote. Democrats must show equal vigilance.

JUDGE CHAUNCY JOSLYN, of Ann Arbor. Michigan, who died on Thursday, was noted for stern sentences given in a peculiarly cheerful way that made him cordially hated by criminals. A few months ago a young man was convicted of a serious crime and when called up for sentence the

You have heretofore borne a good charac-ter, and I feel that the best interests of society will be subserved by giving you a light sentence. The law says I may give you fifteen years at Jackson, but in view of your record and the mitigating circum-stances surrounding your case, I will make the sentence fourteen years.

The prisoner fainted in the dock. And yet this judge was a genial and popular man and a famous story teller.

It is one week since New York opened the subscription list for her guarantee fund for the world's fair and declared that the five millions would be subscribed in five days. The subscriptions to date are a little more than one million eight hundred thousand dollars. Chicago long ago announced eight millions subscribed and ten more in sight. The secretary of the Chicago enterprise has cabled their agent, who was sent to Paris to gather points and plans, " Congressional pledges show Chieago is already chosen. Forward plans, etc., immediately. Executive committee ready for instant action. "

DEMOCRATS must get to work at once and demonstrate the very plain and simple fact that no unprejudiced and honest patriot can refuse to vote on Tuesday for Bigler and ballot reform.

IN HER NIGHT ROBE IN A SWAMP.

Asleep, Chilied and Mouning in a Marsh at Midnight. The adventures of Pauline Schultz, aged

24, of New York, while visiting her aunt, Mrs. Freund, in Bayonne, N. J., almost coused a young man's death from fright and her own from exposure coused a young man's death from fright and her own from exposure

The young man was going home after midnight and started across the sait meadows between Constable Hook and Centreville. He was startled in the midst of the marsh by the sudden appearance, as if out of the ground, of a figure clad in the airy robes of white which returned spirits are properly supposed to wear. The young lover didn't wait to be interviewed and didn't stop running till he reached police headquarters at Bayonne, and, then, while he clutched the railing before Sergeant Cavanagh's desk, he gasped between his chattering teeth that he had been pursued by a ghost. As he was soothed into a little calmness by the sergeant he said he knew it was a ghost because it was so frail.

Sergeant Cavanagh likes a ghost story, too, and he called in two patrolmen and posted them off with orders to capture that ghost if it was a possible thing. Arrived in the centre of the ditch, they, too, were startled by a figure in white. It was mak-ling a wild, weird, moaning noise, and almost paralyzed with fear, the bluecoats advanced on it with drawn clubs.

But they found it to be composed of shoulders and substance. They dragged it out of the mud into which it had sunk, and found it to be a young woman, unconscious, and as cold and clammy as a corpse. She was clad in a night robe.

The officers hurried her to the house of the nearest physician, and under the ministrations of the doctor she revived sufficiently to tell that she was Miss Pauline Schultz, of 9 Frankford street, New York, and had been visiting with her mother at the home of her aunt, Mrs. Freunde, Bayonne. She didn't know how she happened to be in the marshes at that unseemly hour and clad so unseasonably.

Her mother, however, said that from infancy she had walked in her sleep, and added: "She was in bed at her aunt's at midnight, and must have had one of her fits of somnambulism during the next hour. She can remember nothing about leaving the house nor how she got more than a mile away in the marshes. The doctor said that she would have been chilled to death in another bour had she not been found." The young woman is now recovering from the shock.

A VALUABLE OLD BUNDLE.

A VALUABLE OLD BUNDLE. Thousands of Dollars That Lay No

glocted for Years in a Safe. From the Philadelphia Inquirer. "Talking about business," said an old and well-known lawyer on South Fifth street yesterday, "it is not what it used to be years ago. When I first began to build up a business the best paying cases were criminal cases and the biggest kind of fees were paid to defend bank robbers and counterfeiters. The counterfeiters were in those days making loads of money, and when they would get caught they would make a strong fight. I remember a case which old Joe Brewster, once had. About the only, furniture that Joe had in his office was a table, a couple of chairs and a fire proof safe. His library consisted of Purdon's Digest and Dunlap's rules. One day old Joe was called on to defend a counterfeiter. The fellow had been indicted and there was a pretty straight case against him, but he was willing to face the music. On the day of the trial he entered his lawyer's office with an old bundle under his arm, apparently a change of the office he turned around and said:

"Say, can't I leave this bundle in that sate?" street yesterday, "it is not what it used to be years ago. When I first began to build

'Certainly, if you want to,' answered "'Certainly, if you want to,' answered his lawyer.
"Well, he just twirled the bundle into the bottom of the safe from where he stood and went into court. He was convicted and sent up for ten years. He served his full time. One day a stranger walked into old Joe's office and shook hands with him. Joe looked at him a minute and said: 'Excuse me. I don't know you.'

"'Say, can't I leave this bundle in that am so and so. I've just finished a ten year term for counterfeiting."

"The devil you say," shouted old Joe.

'They kept you up there a good while, didn't they?"

"Yes. But it is all right, I guess. Why, I left a bundle in your safe the day I went into court. I thought I'd call around and see if you had it yet."

"Why, yes, I have. It's been lying there ever since, said Joe, pulling the bundle, black with dust, from its corner in the safe. 'I was going to throw it out several times; but, as it wasn't in the way, I thought I'd leave it there, as you might call for it some day. Old clothes, I suppose?"

pose?"
"Yes,old clothes," answered the stranger, as he nervously clutched the bundle. Then he tore the wrapper off and Old Joe fainted.

fainted.

"The bundle, Old Joe afterward told me, contained several thousand genuine dollars rolled up in oilskin and tied with ordinary twine. It had lain neglected in the dusty old safe for twelve years, and Old Joe had never known what he was so near. Yes, I think Joe got a good fee out of that case, but I don't know how much it was."

Did Not Return For His Wife. Did Not Return For His Wife.

Twenty-two years ago John McQuewn lived, with his wife and six children, near Lebanon, Indiana, but in August, 1867, suddenly disappeared, and no tidings of him were ever received. Mrs. McQuewn, supposing herself a widow, remarried, but her second husband lived but two years. Last week McQuewn returned to his home, but not, however, to claim his wife. Instead, he demanded possession of the farm, and the court will now have to name the rightful owner.

The best medical writers caim that the successful remedy for nasal catarrh must be non-irritating, easy of application, and one that will reach all the remote sores and ulcerated surfaces. The history of the efforts to treat catareh during the past obliges us to admit that only one remedy has met these conditions, and that is Ely's Cream Baim. "In the early part of 1887 acrofula appeared on the head of my little grandchild, then only is months old. Shortly after breaking out it spread rapidly all over her body. The scabs on the sores would peal off on the slightest touch, and the odor that would arise would make the atmosphere of the room sickening and unbearable. The disease next attacked the eyes and we feared she would lose her sight. Eminent physicians of the country were consulted, but could do nothing to relieve the little innocent, and gave it as their opinion, 'that the case was hopeless and impossible to save the child's eyesight. It was then that we decided to try Swift's Specific (S. S. S.) That medicine at once made a speedy and complete cure. For more than a year past she has been as healthy as any child in the land."
