THE LONE STAR STATE.

PERRE LANCASTRIANS VISIT IT AND ONE WRITER OF THEIR OBSERVATIONS.

The Progressive Town of San Angelo Plenty of Cheap Lands-A Description Of a Hound-Up and Branding.

Ban Arcelo, Texas, Oct. 23.—We are two thousand miles from old Lancaster, dwelling in a land as fair as the sun ever shone upon. The air is soft and balmy, with enough of tropical suggestiveness in it to remind you what the temperature might be, if we were not 1,800 feet above the level of the sea. We have been here ten days studying the country, and more particularly busying ourselves about the present condition and future possibilities of the land and cattle interests of the Lone-Star state.

But I should not omit to mention here that the "we" of our party consisted chiefly of two well known Lancastrians, both of whom have reached the top niches in their respective pursuits of farming and the law. For most of what here appears, I am indebted to their keen inquiries and pungent criticism of whatever came under our observation.

This is indeed a magnificent country and pungent criticism of whatever came under our observation.

This is indeed a magnificent country and it only requires for its proper development the immigration of farmers, like the sturdy husbandmen of Lancaster country, who would soon help to make this wilderness blossom as the ross. The term "wilderness, blossom and your eye is greeted with the seemingly infinite expanse of prairie land. In a radius of a dozen miles from this point there are many tracts under cultivation. But in comparison with the countless acres that have not yet felt under cultivation. But in comparison with the countless acres that have not yet felt the tiller's hand, the cultivated spots are as nothing. Yet this must some day be a great farming country, and those who come here first and get the cheap three dollar-an-acre lands will leave a rich inheritance to their posterity.

A FUSHING TOWN.

The town of San Angelo is situated at the confluence of the North, Middle and South Concho streams, and its business is gathered from a radius of country reaching 200 miles, in which territory it is the chief centre of population. There are stores in San Angelo that are only surpassed by a half dozen Lancaster stores, and they all appear to do a thriving trade. It is claimed that there are 4,500 people within the town limits, which seems to be justified by appear to do a thriving trade. It is claimed that there are 4,500 people within the town limits, which seems to be justified by appearances. To the stranger the most unique sign-board in the town is one that catches the eye on walking from the depot. It stands out at right angles from a saloon entrance with the captivating logend, "The First Chance." Your wonder at the inge-nuity of the designer is increased when you see on the reverse side of the board the you see on the reverse side of the board the still more alluring letters, "The Last Chance." The incoming traveler is thus reminded of his opportunities, while the wants of the outgoing traveler are not for-wants of the outgoing traveler are not forgotten.

This is the county seat of Tom Green county and there is an $80,000 court house and $20,000 jail, of which the people are deservedly proud. These are new buildings, the county seat having been transferred from Ben Ficklin, a few miles distant, when the latter place five years ago was swept away by a flood. There are churches of all creeds and a great deal of public spirit is shown among the people, who a year ago subscribed a $60,000 bonus to bring the Gulf, Colorado & Santa Fe railroad here. They are now talking of a line to Abilene to connect with the Texas Pacific. They have organized a very fine fair association and are in the midst of preparation for a most creditable display. The fair grounds include a fine one-mile track and there is ample stabling for two hundred head of horses and cattle. This is great progress when it is remembered that fifteen years ago the Comanche and Apache Irdians were scalping the hardy pioneers and the government guarded the frontier line by building a garrison at Fort Concho.

THE CATTLE BUSTNESS.

It is remarkable how stiffly the prices of line by building a garrison at Fort Concho.

THE CATTLE BUSINESS.

It is remarkable how stiffly the prices of real estate in this town held their own when the cattle business began its mournful descent in the winter of 1885 and the apring of 1886. For a few years prior to that time everyone had been making money. Then there came a wild rush to buy cattle and land, followed by the inevitable reaction. Many were runed, but the more substantial and tenacions cattlemen held on in the belief that the disaster was only a temporary one. But the drought of 1886-7, when not a drop of rain fell from of 1886-7, when not a drop of rain fell from October of one year to the following August, made the situation assume a bluer tinge. Then quarantine laws August, made the situation assume a bluer tinge. Then quarantine laws against Texas cattle were passed in Kansas and New Mexico. From these causes cattle declined in value one hundred per cent and land felt the effects of the depression. But the town lots of San Angelo held their own, which is a pretty good indication that the town has come to stay.

All the prospects point to the transformation of this region it an a grazing to a farming country. The sales of ranches containing 50,000 acres and more grow less frequent each year, and the division into smaller farms shows the inevitable progress smaller farms shows the inevitable progress toward the new order of things. Windmills are beginning to dot the landscape, and the corn and sorghum grass are waving where erstwhile the mesquite held sole decrease.

ing where erstwhile the mesquite held sole domain.

The mesquite grass and trees are a peculiar product of Western Texas. The grass is most unlike the rich green turf that is seen in Lancaster county and throughout Pennsylvania. While at its best, it looks like cured hay and does not grow to the height of our meadow grass, but it flourishes the year around and affords excellent winter pasturage. Other grasses, such as the Johnson and alfalfa grass, have been introduced here with great success. The mesquite trees, which constitute the chief timber of the prairios, are a scrubby growth, the trees rarely attaining a height of more than 10 or 12 feet. They make the fuel that is used for domestic purposes, and the trees are most valuable as a protection to the cattle when a flerce "Norther" sweeps down on this usually mild latitude, the temperature of which ranges from 54° to 85° above zero the year around.

A ROUND-UP.

A ROUND-UP.

A ROUND-UP.

To the Northerner one of the most interesting sights in this neighborhood is what is termed the "round-up" of the cattle. The estate in which we are interested is a half-owner in about 58,000 acres of land and about 8,000 head. cattle. In which we are intercated is a half-owner in about $8,000 acres of land and about $8,000 head of cattle.
Though these lands are all under fence,
the cattle of adjacent owners are certain to become intermingled in course of time, and a "round-up" is necessary about four times a year to ascertain ownership. Each ranchman has his own peculiar brand whereby he may know his own property and the "round-up" has the additional effect of gathering together the calves for branding. In a herd of $,000, the increase in calves annually is figured at about one-fourth, and as the fall "round-up" is one of the largest, we were treated to the sight of about 70° calves branded during our ten days' stay.

This is the way they set about it: The ranchman with his cowboys, together with the cowboys of the adjacent ranchmen, all gather together at an appointed spot, and ranchman with his cow boys, together with the cow boys of the adjacent ranchmen, all gather together at an appointed spot, and after partaking of a meal, the chief ingredients of which are furnished by the slaughter of a captured helfer, all mount their horses and dash off in search of the kine. They circle around a particular belt of the ranch, all driving their cattle to a central point. It is no casy task to drive these denizens of the plains. They are apt to seek cover, and the most vigorous shouting and hustling on the part of the cowboys are required before they are induced to begin the march. Some of them are contrary enough to dash away from the others even after they have been gathered into a procession, and it takes an agile cowboy and a fleet-footed horse to keep them in control. When from hill and dale each horseman drives his bunch of cattle to the contral point, it is a most interesting sight the see the thousands of brutes surrounded by horsemen and keeping up a great bellowing, as if they anticipated what was to come.

dent, was elected to represent the society on the general executive committee of the state societies.

Then ensues the "cutting-out" process, namely, the separation of those cattle that do not belong to the ranchman whose stock is being rounded-up. The "strays," as they are called, are kept in a separate banch, and finally the main herd is driven to a large corral. There the fire is already ander way to heat the branding irons, and coon the work begins. Two or three nimble cowboys on horseback go into the enclosure and begin "roping" the calves that are to be branded. It is not so difficult to pull a three or four-month-old calf to the place of torture, but when a yearling is strateging, a few able-bodied men are seeded before he is finally thrown on his ide and held down while the branding irons, are applied to him.

It makes the flesh creep at the first sight of the branding iron burning into the fiesh of a calf, and his piteous bollow awakens a feeling akin to sympathy as the odor of singed fiesh rises in the air. But it does not seem to cause him serious inconvenience, for he frisks back into the herd again after the operation is over, apparently contented that his treatment was not worse. The cattlemen brand only in the spring and in the fall, for the reason that the wound caused by branding only heals after three or four weeks, and if in the meantime, the branded cattle scratch themselves and bring the blood, a blow-fly will be apt to settle thereon, deposit a few million eggs which, developing into worms, will eat the flank out of an animal, if ununchecked.

will cat the flank out of an animal, if ununchecked.

The people of Texas and throughout the great Southwest are intensely interested in securing a deep water harbor in the Gulf of Mexico. Hundreds of thousands of dollars have been expended on the Galveston beach, but the work has been rendered naught each year by the formation of sand bars. The thoughts of all are now turning to the country at the mouth of the Brazos river, and Congress will be carnestly urged to aid the effort to secure for Texas the great ocean trade that has been so near and is yet so far. A prominent citizen of San Angelo asserts that it would add two or three dollars to each acre of land and to each head of cattle in Texas. Assuredly it would save them from the extortion of railroads and the cormorant Armours et al., who now have the cattlemen at their mercy.

Armours et al., who now have the cattle-men at their mercy.

Nor would it affect the cattlemen only in this beneficial way. Texas will plek this year 1,750,000 bales of ectton, which at an average price of $10 per bale will realize $70,000,000. How much more valuable would this crop become if ready access to the markets of the world could be had on the Texas coast?

A HEALTHY COUNTRY.

There is a wonderful inspiration in the ir down here. The ozone in it seems to air down here. have the peculiar property of warding off fatigue, and men can go through violent exertions here without much physical im-pairment. Even under the glare of the noonday sun a soft breeze plays, and no matter how hot the day, the nights are deightfal. For those who are victims of malaria there is no finer climate anywhere. The ranchmen sleep out on the prairie these October nights with only their blankets wrapped about them and their saddles for pillows. There is a touch of savagery about it that is half delightful offer one has lived for years in the more of savagery about it that is had delightful after one has lived for years in the more commonplace surroundings of Eastern civilization. And then the game! On our tour we came across flock after flock of quail, and could get almost near enough to beat them down with a club. We saw a least of autolores which timidly perbeat them down with a club. We saw a herd of antelopes, which timidly permitted us to get within 500 feet of them, our party being to windward of them. But something frightened them and they scampered over the prairie faster than any horse could follow. Prairie dogs are numerous, and the holes in which they live are often a serious pitfall for a horse that is not wary of his path.

Some day in the near future this wonderful state of Texas, more than six times as large in area as Pennsylvania, will be filled with the children of men. When that time comes, Tom Green county will that time comes, Tom Green county will not be lacking in all that goes to make up the story of progress. With its cheap lands, fine location and bracing climate it is most naturally fitted to hold an enoris most naturally fitted to hold an enor-mous population on its more than 3,250,000 acres. Those who are decrying the evils of excessive immigration would cease if they came here and saw the magnificent chances for a poor man to become the owner of his home and the carver of a useful destiny in settling upon this fair portion of God's garden. Increased culti-vation render droughts less possible and least damaging.

No fertilizers are here required. The decay of centuries has made a rich, black loamy soil, in some places 18 inches deep, where the merest tyro at farming could where the increase tyre at lathing could easily sow and reap. Corn, cotton, wheat, oats, rye, millet and sorghum are very finely raised here, even under the most imperfect system of farming. What would they be if the lengthened experience and splendid system of the Lancaster county splendid system of the Lancasco firmer were practiced upon them? R. M. R.

THOMAS LOOMIS CAPTURED.

Young Lancaster Tough, Who Had Been Wanted for Some Time, Taken. Thomas Loomis, a young tough of this city, who has been wanted here for some time to answer several charges, was lodged in jail last night through the instrumentality of Chief of Police Smeltz, young roughs who infested the northern part of town and were known as the Facgleysville gang, several members of which are now in jail awaiting trial on wery serious charges. Loomis has figured in numerous disgraceful scrapes at different times, but he iled from town to escape being arrested. About eight months ago being arrested. About eight months ago he weste a felonious assault upon George S. Finefrock by striking him on the head with a billy or a stone, which was wrapped in a handkerchief. Complaint was also made against him, charging him with feloniously entering an outbuilding on the premises of Jacob Landis, a farmer residing near Oregon, where he stole a lot of tools and other things. Early in June he is said to have stolen a piece of pipe, which was the property of the city, while Superintendent of Water Works Frailey was laying a water pipe on New street. was laying a water pipe on New street. Complaint on this charge was made by Frailey before Alderman Halbach. The chief of police recently located Loomis and found that he was working for Lemuel Sweigert, a farmer near Brownstown, Sweigert, a farmer near Brownstown, Loomis is well acquainted with all the constables, and the chief did not consider it advisable to send any of them for him. On Tuesday afternoon he dispatched Officer Glass and Special Officer Gill to make the arrest. They left Lancaster in a covered wagon yesterday afternoon and drove to the place where they learned Loomis was. They pretended to be on a gunning trip, and wore old clothes and carried guns. They went to Sweigert's home, and were soon out in one of the fields as though in search of game. They had no trouble in bagging of game. They had no trouble in bagging the rabbit that they were after. They came upon Loomis, who was husking corn, very suddenly, and he recognized them when they were close upon him. It was too late, however, and he was unable to get away, so he was taken into custody. The officers brought him to town, and he will be heard before Aldermen Deen and Halbach, where the complaints are lodged against him on the different charges. the different charges.

The officers learned that Loomis was traveling under the assumed name of Thomas Wiley at Brownstown. He was considered a very hard character by the people of the neighborhood and he recently gave a young fellow a beating, but man-aged to settle the case upon the payment of costs, before a country squire. He always carried a revolver or billy and seemed anxious to use either upon the least provocation. Loomis is the man that Constabl Ehrman attempted to arrest in Faegleys-ville early in the summer when he made his escape after the officer had fired a num-ber of shots at him from a revolver. He says that he has paid but one visit to Lan-caster rices that time and he had intended leaving Brownstown in a short time. He leaving Brownstown in a short time. He also informed the officers that if he had recognized them before they came so close they would not have taken him.

Before Alderman Halbach, Constable
James Buchanan Ehrman has brought a suit against Herman Ehrhart, a junk dealer residing in the northern part of the city, charging him with receiving stolen goods. It is alleged that Loomis sold Ehrhart the piece of pipe that he stole from the city.
