Overhead Wires. The objection which our people reasonably entertain to overhead electric wires need not be encountered in an efficient system of propulsion; because there is nothing in the nature of the motor that requires it to be transmitted by overhead wires rather than in underground conduits. It is not a matter open to dispute that overhead wires of every kind are an encumbrance and a danger upon the streets of a city. They are in the way of firemen and the poles are in the way of the people. When they are charged with electricity they become a great additional danger; and even the inno-cent telephone wire becomes the agent of death when crossed by the heavily charged wires of the electric light, as abundant illustrations have lately

In the advanced condition of our civilization we do not let destruction of life stand in the way of a material improvement. No one suggests the banishment of the electric light because it is dangerous. Those who choose to use it may so, and those who manufacture it may lawfully transmit it, whatever slaughter they commit in doing it.

We believe, however, that while these dangerous agencies of modern invention are permitted and even encouraged by public sentiment, it demands that their danger shall be made as little as possible; and that it is not properly held to be obstructing the wheels of progress to demand that they shall be run with the greatest regard for human life.

Population has not yet become so great that the slaughter of men is considered benefaction to the race. Theoretically life is valuable and its spoliation is a crime; though practically and in view of the impunity with which railroad managers kill brakemen by lack of automatic couplers, and electricity makers slay their linemen by the failure of the insulation of their wires, the law has become a dead letter in these wholesale slaughters. No good reason can be given why a railroad manager who permits a man to be killed in coupling cars should not be adjudged guilty of manslaughter; since there are abundant means for coupling cars without ordering men to go between them to do it. So the manager who sends a killing electric current through an unprotected wire is guilty, under the definition of the law, of manslaughter, if by his negligence a man is slain. No railroad or electric light manager has ever been punished, though the deaths by their orders have been many. The law is suspended for their benefit. The people who get between cars and upon electric wires must look out for

matter of electric propulsion of street cars; that they suspend their hasty action authorizing the erection of poles and overhead wires, until they can determine whether they afford the best means of doing the work. It may be that they do. It is said that the electric charge they will carry will not be a dangerous one; but it is better that they should be buried out of sight if it may be done. And we print elsewhere a description of a method by which it is said that it may be done.

A Difference In the Hurry. Reading has sensibly concluded to manufacture her own electric light which she finds she can do at a far less price than she pays for it now, Lan easter found out the same thing some time ago when she had an expert examination made of her water power, and an estimate of the cost of utilizing it for her electric lighting. What has become of this matter in councils? There does not seem to have been the same haste to inaugurate this change as there was to establish the poles and wires for street car propulsion, and yet it was quite as wise a movement, if not wiser one. When Councilman Altick obtained so favorable a report from the engineer who made the examination into the capacity of the water power owned by the city to supply its electric light, and the small cost at which the plant would be established and the great saving that would result in the cost of lighting the city, we expected that councils would promptly take measures to carry so well appearing a project into effect. But the report still remains without action upon it. It sleeps the sleep of a project that has no one to buil and bother it. There is no money to be made out of it by anyone but the city, and there is no sufficient reason why councils should fret about saving money for a town so rich as Lancaster that can afford every luxury she wants at the highest price, and that employs a street committee that covers the street with soft stones in the summer and digs them out from the resultant mud in the spring.

He Did Not Act as He Talks. Secretary Proctor is not happy in his reply to the notification from the mayor of New Orleans of Jefferson Davis' death. He re-fused to put his flag at half-mast therefor, as has been done with every other secretary of war, of whatever merit; and there have been some who have had mighty bad records after they left the office. Still the flag was half masted for them, because it was the rule; and the rule required it to be done for Jefferson Davis, who was at least an honorable and virtuous man, if the chief of the rebels. And as a good many of these rebels have had flags lowered for them since the rebellion, it is not clear where-fore the official head of the Confederacy ould have been too bad for the grace. It does not matter much that the flag was not lowered. But if Secretary Proctor had desired to act as he says he did, and wished to do nothing that would be unusual, he should have half-masted a flag that a retary's death has always, heretofore, half-masted. He writes much like an old woman when he says to the mayor of New Orleans that he really hopes he does not hurt anybody's feeling and that he wants to keep things moving along quietly and to let by gones be forgotten. And so he does what has never been done before and makes a successful effort to stir up the feelings of the past.

THE NEWS that American missionaries were making efforts to bring Moussa Bey to justice is swiftly followed by information that he has arrived there. This brutal Turkish brigand, whose great wealth and strong following long enabled him to rob, burn and murder the Americans, has at last been exiled to Syria.

THERE is said to be a strong resemblance between Congressman Goodnight, of Kentucky, and our own holy John Wanamaker, the appointment clerk and order postoffices for his friends just as if he were Mr. Wanamaker. Goodnight however, is as great a Sunday school man as the postmaster general and gravely de-clines to do anything of the kind. The story runs that the Kentucky man is so much like Mr. Wansmaker that he is often stopped on the street by parties want-ing postofilees. If inte in the day he could often easily dismiss them, and yet leave undisturbed the impression that he was the great John of the clothing house. To the queries "Are you willing to oblige me?" or "Are you Mr. Wanamaker?" he might reply veraciously, "I am. Good-

THE subterranean lake, long supposed to be hidden not far under Lancaster, has not yet been tapped by the two thousand foot well of the Penn Iron company, but at Pottstown the Phœnix Bridge company have found a lake of warm water at a depth of only a hundred feet. The temperature of the water is sixty-five degrees. Geologists have hinted the existence of the Lancaster lake, but they never gave any reason to suspect a warm water tank under Pottstown. It is evident that the guesses of geologists are not worth much more than those of ordinary mortals, and the only way to find out what is under us is to go down and see. Pottstown seems to have captured a pet marvel which Lan-castrians had been made to believe would be found here, but we may have the gratification of a bigger wonder when we do strike water, as we must go so much deeper for it.
Little Pottstown, by the way, shows commendable enterprise in some things, and deserves subterranean blessings in return. Frequently men are injured about the public works, and either the old stretcher is called into use or one of the hacks called for to convey the unfortunate home." A fire company has resolved to buy an ambulance which will answer telephone calls from any part of the borough. "The service will be free to all who cannot afford to pay for it, and the expenses attending it will be raised by private subscription.

After the Pottstown hospital is established the ambulance service will be worked in Pottstown villagers might be surprised to learn that in wealthy, prosperous Lan-caster there is no ambulance, though the INTELLIGENCER has a slowly growing fund with which one will be bought.

WE incline to the opinion that the county commissioners have the best of the mayor upon the agitated question of courtesy.

A CERTAIN Colonel Layburn has been startling New York with claims of the support of the pope in a vast banking scheme. He represented that branches of the bank were already established in Italy, France and England. To give his claims an appearance of reality he paid a considerable sum for a charter in New York, and took the refusal of an office at high rent. The New York Herald cabled to Rome inquiring about the matter, and the secretary of state of the vatican declared that nothing was known there of any And to that end we counsel the councils of this city that they look into this whole thing as a fraud, but strange to say, the colonel is quite calm under fire. He still insists that his company is all right, and showed no dismay at the telegram from Rome. He says that the matter was secret, and the secretary of state would naturally know nothing of the bank until founded. He points to the benediction of the pope bearing the seal of Cardinal Laurenzi and asks whether he forged the document. It would be pretty safe to say that he did, but he is certainly a cool and bold operator and for that reason it is the more fortunate that he has been smothered so early in his career. He is said to have peculiar gifts for enterprises of this kind, is suave and plausible, quick in his answers and well informed. Rascals of this grade are more to be feared than all the burglars alive.

THE WORLD'S FAIR.

The Plan Agreed Upon for an Exposition in Washington.

The national board of promotion, in charge of the Three Americas exposition movement, have agreed upon the following bill, which was to-day introduced in both the Senate and House:

the Senate and House:

A bill to provide for a Three Americas and world's exposition at the national capital in 1892.

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America, in Congress assembled. That a Three Americas and world's exposition be held at the national capital in 1892, in commemoration of the 400th anniversary of the discovery of America by Christopher Columbus, and that the president of the United States appoint a government board of nine directors to formulate and superof nine directors to formulate and superintend the execution of a plan for such

A TERRIBLE CHARGE.

The Minneapolis "Tribune's" Ex-Cashier Suspected of Having Fired the Building. cial to the St. Louis Republic from A special to the St. Louis Republic from St. Paul, Minn., says: Charles S. Ostrom, until last Friday night eashier and book-keeper of the Minneapolis department of the St. Paul Pioneer Press is suspected of having started the fire which burned the Minneapolis Tribune building, and resulted in the death of seven men.

He is charged on Friday night preceding the fire with having stolen $2,200 of the fands belonging to the Pioneer Press. He admitted his guilt, and refused to help his employers in straightening out the books. The rumor was soon abroad that Ostrom had fired the Tribune building to hide the evidences of his guilt.

With tears streaming down his cheeks, Ostrom said: "I know it looks as though I were guilty of the awful crime now charged against me, but as God is my witness, I am not. I think I can prove a clear alibi on that dreadful night. I knew that my peculations would soon be discovered, and I had determined to leave the city. I went to the depot for that purpose, but concluded it would be better to stay and face my troubles. I went from the depot to my home, at nine o'clock, first stopping at the theatre, where I expected to find my wife, but did not see her there and went on home. It is true I left my books out of the safe the night of the fire, which looked bad for me, as their destruction would destroy the evidence against me, but I did not fire the Tribune building."

Detectives have been watching Ostrom two weeks prior to the fire and may know something of his whereabouts on that fatal night. His downfall is due to gambling. He married a young girl about three months ago.

A FIRE ESCAPE NOT USED.

A PIRE ESCAPE NOT USED. The Associated Press sent out from Minneapolis a week ago the substance of the resolutions of the local typographical union designated by name Gen. A. B. Nettleton as the owner of the burned build-Nettleton as the owner of the burned building, and as censurable for neglecting repeated requests of occupants for additional fire escapes. A later personal explanation from Gen. Nettleton did not reach all points in time for publication. The structure was built and owned by a corporation of which Gen. Nettleton was formerly a member and officer, but he ceased to have any interest in or control over the corporation and building more than two years ago. The coroner's jury find that one committee of the Labor Union conferred with the company some four years ago in regard to fire of the Labor Union conferred with the com-pany some four years ago in regard to fire escapes; that soon thereafter an additional folding iron ladder escape was put in the Tribunel composing room, on the seventh floor, and that this escape was in the build-ing on the night of the fire, but was not known and not used. This additional fire escape has been found among the ruins since the fire.
