NEXT DOOR TO THE COURT HOUSE.

CHRISTMASTIDE, OLD AND RE
When Christ was born, that blessed night
A gate of heaven was held ajar;
And through its portals gleaming bright,
There shone a rare supernal light—
Paling the sheen of every star.
As if Jehovah's diadem
Was bowed to gase at Bethlehem!
In all the world but three so wise,
To read the signal of the skies.

Through the soft radiance, toward the earth.
God's choicest choirs came winging down.
To tell in songs of holy mirth
The Hdings of His woodross birth;
The Prince of Peace, without a crown!
Such music never hath been sung
To angel's harp by seraph's tongue!
The world heard not, all wrapt in sleep,
Have a few shepherds tending sheep.

Earth did not wake to greet her guest!
Her jealous palaces were shut;
Elsewhere God's Son must go in quest
Of shetter, welcome, love and rest,
And be denied in hall and hut!
Ah! bitter pang—among His own—
Thus to be spurned as one unknown!
The wide world held but one retree
Fair Mary's bosom pure and sweet

The centuries have rolled along—
And now, when sounds the Christmas hour,
The world keeps watch with light and song
And joins its chorus rich and strong—
With chimes from palace, church and tower!
The nations shout, "All hall the mora
That Christ in Beihlehem was born!"
Dear Lord, if Theu to-day wouldst come
Millions of hearts would give Thee home!
—Exchange.

THE BABY SANTIES. Do the little baby Santies
Have a tree themselves?
Frolicking around it gaily,
Merry mountain eives?
Loading it with precious plunder
From their teeming selves?

In it nice to have old Banty in the house always, Seeing every look and movement, Noting all one says— Ready with a word of warning

No: I think I'd rather have him Down the chimney pop, Bringing me a store of treasures

Not to know what he will bring us, That indeed is joy: Wishing, hoping, half the fun is To each girl and boy; Knowing Santy well, I fear, would

Yet I like to think his babics

Yet I like to think as store,
Have their Christmas store,
All their stockings filled with presents
When his ride is o'er—
When his reindeer steeds are stabled
Safe in stall once more!
