PITTSBURGH ORDERS DOWN WIRES. A Theory Hadly Voted by a Burning Fact; and 500 or More of the City's Telephone Lines to be Cut.

The Pittsburgh Dispatch, of the 7th inst., says: The great and final argument against overhead wires was made last night about 11:30, when an employe of the Pleasant Valley street car road, was badly shocked at the corner of Virginia alley and Smithfield street.

The theory of the harmlessness of 500 volts and the workman both received a severe shock, and the employe was rendered unconscious until the arrival of the patrol wagon, which took him to the Homestead hospital, where he recovered consciousness about 11:15 p. m.

The whole body, however, showed sufficient symptoms to indicate that he was suffering from some time yet from the effects of the electric current.

Further advices from Chief Higelow last night were that the wire must go underground. He says he has an agreement in black and white with the representatives of street car companies, telephone companies and the city.

At the time the chief was consulted he was not aware of the accident which shortly after accentuated his remarks so that he was aware that Mayor Mahon later Officer Duffy, on a First ward street car, reported a man shocked badly at the corner of Virginia alley and Smithfield street.

At 6:20 o'clock, on Tuesday, just opposite the intersection of the business quarter of the city, two street car horses ran against a wire, which caught them both under the neck, and in sight of early risers, who were working for some time, the horses were literally burnt off.

JUMPED INTO THE CREEK. THE FOX LET AT LARGE AT GREENLAND MAKES A BAD BREAK.

Reynard Furnishes Fine Sport For Many Hunters and Dogs—The Animal Taken From This City Dies Too Soon.

The fox chase at Greenland took place on Tuesday afternoon, and in the face of many difficulties and unfortunate occurrences it was a decided success.

While most of the hunters were enjoying themselves in dinner they were notified by the report that the fox had died in the cellar of the hotel, where he had been placed after being brought from town.

An unfortunate circumstance of this kind would have disheartened many men and broken up the party.
