

JACOB W. NISSLEY'S SIDE.

HE TELLS A REPORTER ABOUT HIS VINEGAR CALL TO THE PRISON.

His Bill Transmously Approved by His Fellow Inspectors—The Prosecutor in the Case an Underkeeper.

Jacob W. Nissley, the prison inspector, who was prosecuted before Alderman Deen, for furnishing supplies to the prison, contrary to law, was in the city to-day with Eugene O. Smith, who accompanied him to the prison, and returned to the city with him.

Mr. Nissley was seen by a reporter of the Intelligencer this morning. He said the first intimation he had of a complaint being made against him was on receipt of the writ issued on Tuesday, Mr. Nissley said he was at Alderman Deen's office on Monday afternoon, several hours after the writ had been issued.

On that same day about 6 o'clock he met Corbin Carter and Carter said to him in a joking manner: "There is a warrant out for you." Mr. Nissley asked him what for and Carter replied that it was all right, but that the suit had been withdrawn and he had paid the cost.

As to the charge against him Mr. Nissley said he was on the house committee of the prison board and as such it was his duty to purchase such supplies as might be needed. In the latter part of October, while at the prison, Keeper Smith said to him that there had been a complaint made against him and he had paid the cost.

He presented his bill to the November meeting and explained to the inspectors his sale of the vinegar and asked his fellow inspectors if there was any objection to the bill. All the inspectors at that meeting said it was all right, and he believed that when his fellow inspectors, by a unanimous vote, approved his bill, he had the sanction of the inspectors for furnishing supplies to the prison.

He attributes the complaint against him to the petty spite of political opponents because they could not use him. He intended to give up the business, but believed that when his fellow inspectors, by a unanimous vote, approved his bill, he had the sanction of the inspectors for furnishing supplies to the prison.
