came up to us from Texas, which is not much of a recommendation to a Southern town. And when we remember how last March the Jersey sea coast was under water and inhabitants scoured almost to death at the invasion of the waves, it seems hazardous enough to resort to the shore for weather and climate's sake.

Hispanic's letter of resignation is said to cover some twenty pages but no hint is given to what it is all about. It is full of grave, cautious and wise advice, like Washington's farewell address, but the old chancellor is not a Washington, and is more likely to have reviewed his glorious past.

Is the current number of the Magazine of American History that is an article by the editor, Martha J. Lamb, on life in New York fifty years ago. From the diary of Philip Hone, a mayor of New York and a prominent banker, many interesting facts are gleaned which throw light on the times and on the bank panic of 1837, when "eight states in part or wholly failed, and the national government could not pay its debts."

Mr. Hone goes on to tell of a dinner given in Washington in 1838 by Daniel Webster to prominent New Yorkers. "Mr. Wise was eloquent and entertaining; Mr. Webster very fine. Old Mr. Robins delivered a beautiful eulogium upon Washington, in a soft and tremulous voice, and in language classical and pure. It was a glorious affair. When I arose at the table at which I had the seat of distinction I was awe-stricken, and for a moment embarrassed, but recovered instantly. I felt as if in an assembly of the gods. These were men who can and will save the country. I told them so, and they responded amen!"

The Journal of the old mayor seems to be full of interest "revealing," as Mrs. Lamb remarks, "what the past centuries had in their reality almost seem borrowed from skillfully woven webs of romance."

of medicines in Frederick county, Md., and that he brought suit against the Adams Express company in Virginia, North and South Carolina for failure to deliver medicines, obtaining numerous judgments by default. The express company failed to put in an answer to the suits. This was the direct result of the company's indifference to him in the sum of $1,500,000, and upon which he based his suit to attach the property of the express company and the signature to which it is charged he forged. Wagner declares came to him through the mails after he had obtained the judgments against the company, and signed in the name of President Dinmore, and although the letter was postmarked from South Carolina, and not from New York, the company's bankers, he nevertheless thought it genuine.

After waiting some time for the money he brought the attachment suit, which has resulted in the attention of the Adams Express company being called to the case and in the doctor's arrest.
