The Primary Election

We wonder whether there is any in ent and self-respecting Republican a Lancaster county who is satisfied with the manner in which the nominas were made which he is expected. and himself expects, to ratify at the polis in November? Doubtless nearly very man of them will vote the ticket a November, despite his conviction that was basely settled ; despite his knowlthat bribery and corruption, resating and cheating, made the settled leket that will successfully appeal to the whole party for support.

To be sure the Republican voter ows that these were the methods in all around the field of candidates, and he may reasonably believe that the en who won were only a little freer with money and subtler in their management wowd anyway to select from and no. won and the best men lost, there being so little difference in the distribu-

And herein is the objection, we hould think, that our reputable Repubican friends would make to their primary system of election as now conthe best caudidates, nor gives a fair expression of the voter's choice even does not make much difference. At any rate it is not of particular moment to the people at large who is chosen among a erally poor lot of candidates. But that is of consequence is the demoralization of the ballot that occurs at these rimaries. When men stand upon the mers awaiting the highest bidder, and may vote as often as bought, there is not only occasion for Republican shame but or general protest. The Democrat can take a hand in objecting to any such performance even in the House of his bes. It is a prostitution that debases the suffrage.

The Republican Legislature, in the fulness of its wisdom, or something nary selection of party candidates, and has covered it with the protection of the law as though it was a ballot of the whole people. But it is a failure as a method for the fair selection of compeat candidates; which no one will inaline to deny after the last exhibition in his county. The convention system of selecting candidates, bad as it is, is for better than this method ; for while it may not better record the people's will, it cannot so greatly demoralize them, or bring the suffrage into contempt.

If there ever was demand for a system at balloting that will abate bribery it was made at the primary election of last Saturday, and the Legislature had better make haste to find it. The Republican Legislature ought to be willing to save career of this age of industrial progress and discovery, and the record he has left of it should be widely read that it may stimulate others with less ability or differing talents to emulate his industry and cheerful zeal.

From the New York Sun. The crowd at the Fins & Doerr auction sale of horses at the Blue Front stables, 147 to 153 East Twenty-Fourth street, yester-day, was the largest yet. Prices had a slightly upward tendency, perhaps on ac-count of the strengthening demand, but more likely because of the superior quality of the horses offered. One sprightly, al-most stylish looking gray, heavy draught horse, for which there was some very briek bidding, went as high as $300. A moment hefore a trotter, guaranteed to pull a road wagon a full mile in 2:35, was knocked down for $230, and not three lots later a splendid pair of draught horses were cap-tured for the low price of $375. Senator Quay finds tongue to tell an interviewing reporter that ex-Governor Pattison would in his opinion make the trongest candidate the Democracy could put up for governor. Mr. Patti-son would doubtless make a strong candidate ; but Senator Quay's opinion on the question is not valuable, even if honest. Republican money and to promote Republican decency by substituting the Acstralian system of voting at Republican primaries. There is a place to test its merit ; but it would probably take a company of the state guard at every poll to get the voter as far away m the purse-bearer as that excellent theoretic system requires. It ould stand no manner of show at, say, the Sixth ward polls, where Republican leacons and church elders assemble to buy, as they next day assemble to pray; and do both with like fervor and freedom. There is eye-shutting in both businesses; which doubtless serves to make them alike congenial to the fervent temperament of hoary-headed sinners. There is nothing like a primary to turn out the Dr. Jekylls and Mr. Hydes among our Republican fellow citizens. The offices are so fine and fat and the ode of getting them so dirty that it pic for them successfully.

James Nasmyth.

The cable recently announced the death of James Nasmyth, a famous engineer and inventor, but one whose reputation has lately grown and is sure to grow further because of his remarkable obiography. It is not often that a chanical genius proves a literary genius, although men of action who ord their doings often make entertaining and valuable books; but Nasmyth was a very remarkable man. He was not only a great mechanical engineer, whose name is familiar as that of the inventor of the steam hammer, but he gave proof of marked ability as an artist and writer, and made valuable discoveries as an astronmer, publishing a book on the moon. His strong points seem to have been a capacity for steady but not exhausting work, a habit of closely observing details apparently significant, and alert and thorough ntion to the routine of business. He himself set great value upon observation and manual training. He says in his famous autobiography : "The truth is that the eyes and the fingersthe bare fingers-are the two principal inlets to sound practical instruction. I have no faith in young engineers who are addicted to wearing gloves. Gloves, apecially kid gloves, are non-conductors of technical knowledge."

He noted and applied information schered from all fields of knowledge no atter how remote from his own paricular line of work. In the steam hannor he showed his knowledge of of anaomy by devising the elastic packing ander the piston rod, acting, as he said, the the cartilege between the bones of the vertebras preventing the destructive fact of violent jars.

He paid his way through college by aking and selling little steam engines or of the most practical of professions bere was no narrow-minded cant about amos Nasmyth, and he readily admitted the existence of other forces sides those that can be measured. In writing of one of his first engines he the active, smooth, rhythmic sound of the merry little engine had, through the strokes of every heavy, so quickened okes of every hammer, chisel and le that it nearly doubled the output of His long life seems to be an ideal

ADVICES from Japan tell of the murder of Rev. T. A. Larger, a Methodist mission-ary at Yokohama, by two burglars who ere each armed with two swords ast. rp as razors. He got awake one night to find a big Jap standing before him holding up a naked sword. The missionary no doubt thought of his wife and child, and remem bered the merciless and desperate character of these Japanese burglars, for without a moment's hesitation he sprang at the man's throat, and in spite of several terrible cuts from the weapons, would have hurled him over the stairway if the other villain had not appeared and literally cut the American to pieces. Mrs. Larger grasped one of the swords in her bare bands, and had several fingers sliced off. Perhaps missionaries in Japan may hereafter keep revolvers handy for emergencies of this kind particularly as it is hinted that the murder may have been a deliberate assassination by fanatics who oppose foreigners, and Beoard, however, decided to protect his family against any possible evil results, and chained himself hand and foot, so that if he went mad he could injure no one.

The man's sufferings became terrible. He raved constantly of the myriads of dogs that were junctions of the myriads of dogs that were inclined to ridicule his precautions, but he remained firm. Two days ago Beoard began to show evidences of hydrophobia. His friends and family became alarmed, and in his last same moments Beoard begged that he might be more securely guarded, so that no harm might come to his loved ones. The man's sufferings became terrible. He raved constantly of the myriads of dogs that were jumping at him. The sight of water threw the sufferer into spasms. Then came intervals of barking and yelping and snapping at anything in sight. Death relieved Beoard on Wednesday evening. The other two men are in an agony of fear. The authorities have issned an order that all dogs in the township must be killed.
