WILKESBARRE, May 17.—At noon today, two more bodies of the Ashley mine victims were brought out of the fatal mine and taken to the morgue. They were identified as Robert Pritchard and Michael Seally.

Work is progressing rapidly at the mines, and the four victims supposed to be in the pit will probably be recovered before night.

At 2 o'clock this afternoon two more victims were brought from the chamber of horrors at Ashley. One is Michael Henry, and the other is so badly mangled as to be unrecognizable.

Being a matter requiring considerable time, Inspector Williams became impatient of delay, and sent two men up the shaft to search for another victim.

Waiting but a moment for the air to clear they advanced down a steep incline of nearly 90 degrees, 300 feet further, when they became aware that they were again in a chamber.

Finally advancing 500 feet through the main gangway they came to a large chamber which proved a veritable chamber of horrors.

As soon as the company had learned that the bodies were being lowered, the men were given that all should be taken to an undertaking establishment and made as presentable as possible.

No pen can describe the blood-curdling scenes at the mines, the morgue and at the undertakers' establishments.

Many of the bodies have no heads, others entire limbs, and most of them are mangled and disfigured.

The three men who were rescued Thursday night separated from the others and advanced to the top of the shaft.
