A RUNAWAY PAIR. Two Horses Kick the Traces Loose and

Two Horses Kick the Traces Loose and Take a Spurt.

Some days ago Henry Weill, the well known horse dealer, purchased a pair of driving horses which he intended for his own use. He thought it best to try the animals before he took his family out and for that purpose he had them hitched up on Saturday evening. Sam. Grau, a young man employed in the stable started to drive them and he was joined on Mulberry street by Mr. Weill, who stood on the rear axle. Just above Chestnut street one of the horses began kicking and loosened one of the traces. The other soon joined him and the pair began a lively kicking, which they kept up until all of the traces were loose. Both animals then began running and Mr. Weill jumped from the wagon. In a few moments the horses were going at a furious rate. They ran up Mulberry to James street and out James to the Lancaster cemetery, where they were stopped. Young Grau held on to the reins, which with the yoke was all that kept the horses to the wagon. Hundreds of people who asw the horses running were sure that Grau would be killed, but he held to the horses and came out all right. The wagon was not damaged in the least.
