It stands back some thirty feet from the street on a small terrace, and is built of brick with brown stone trimmings on a white stone basement. The entrance is reached by a flight of stone steps, lighted on either side by a handsome bronze lamp. The drawing room on the left of the hall is ornamented with a wide bay window. The "camp furniture" of the house, as Mr. Breckinridge calls it on account of his frequent movings, is of the most ele-gant description and is arranged with great taste.

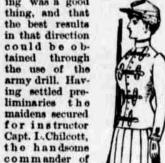

Mr. Breckinridge's home life is very simple. His particular chum is his little 13-year-old daughter, who sticks to him like a chestnut burr. The greatest frolic of the year to the pair is on New Year's day, when they both go visiting to gether. Miss Breckinridge wears a costume of pure white, and her face is one broad smile of childish delight as she wings on to her father's hand. They first pay their respects to the president. Then they go to the few houses where Mr. Breckinridge calls. The little maid gets her pockets full of candics, is petted by all the men and kissed by all the ladies. Her mother remonstrates at this unique performance, but Mr. Breckin-ridge declares he will have his way about this, as he has to give it up in

Military Drill as a Means for Successful

Physical Training. Bangor is known as the Queen city of Maine, and she now deserves the title in a double degree, for a number of the princesses have of late been learning how to rule in times of war as well as in days of peace.

The Chilcothians is the name of a milltary company composed entirely of comely young women who last winter came to the conclusion that physical training was a good the from competition for the summer and do no more training until just before the championship games in September. He is afraid of weakening himself during the hot weakher through running, for his pre-sent weight is 100 pounds and he can afford

Were it not that he intends run-ning an Australian soon for a large amount of money be would be in America now. He wishes to see if H. Bethune, H. M. Johnson and several other fast American sprinters are really anxious to run him, as they claim they are.

George Grant, the celebrated English professional sprinter who has run from scratch in nearly all the Sheffleld handi-caps within the past year, is now in Amer-ica. His arrival was unberalded and his future doings are not made public. He is considered as fast a runner for 130 yards as England can at present boast of.

THE BROOKLYN THEATRE. eral hurrah, Richard Mansfield and Rose Coghlan were the theatrical stars on these The Brooklyn theatre will be remembered by play goers and others whose memor-ies run back for fourteen years as the scene of the most frightful disaster that ever happened on this continent in connection with the stage. It was the burning of the building on the evening of Dec. 5, 1876, and the loss of 295 lives. The building that was burned stood at the corner of Washington and Johnson streets. The house was of brick and nicely decorated. The Conways opened the theatre with Bulwer's "Money" in October, 1871, and held the management for four years. After the death of Mr. and Mrs. Conway their daughters, Minnie and

Lillian, continued to manage the theatre for a few months with poor success. Then Theodore Moss, of Wallack's, took the theatre for a short time, and was succeeded by Messrs. Shook and Palmer, of the Union Square theatre, who remained in possession of the theatre until Dec. 5, 1876. The curtain had risen that evening on the last act of the "Two Orphans," when Kate Claston, who was playing the leading part, heard the actors behind the scenes exclaim "The theatre's on fire!"

The flactor's on fire?" The flames spread rapidly, and soon the flames were leaping up the gallery and spreading in great crimson sheets over the auditorium. Then began a frightful strug-gle for life. Consternation spread through the large audience, and men and women the men and women in the second trampled upon each other in their efforts to escape. Those in the gallery became wedged in the narrow stairway leading to the street, the entrance to which had been closed by the police in order to shut off the draught, the officers not knowing that the passageway was choked with struggling victims. These were speedily suffocated.

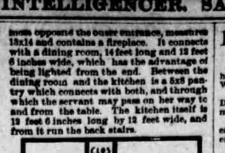

The roof fell in upon their heads, and the stairs gave way beneath them. Two of the actors, Henry I. Murdock and Claude Bur-

He has been a factory hand, a newspaper editor, a lawyer, and speaker of the Massachusetts Legislature; he re-ceived the presidential nomination at he hands of the North American conention in New York in 1856; he has ernor of his native state, speaker of the bonse of represe Watives, United states marshal, and is now a member of congress again. Through all his varied career he has occupied the plain, old fashioned home which is pictured here, and which he loves because it has been the birthplace of his ohildren.

THE RESIDENCE OF GEN. BANKS. It is a square, two-story frame house, over one hundred years old, and was one of the first residences to be crected in Waltham. The only decoration on its aterior is a Corinthian portico over the would induce him to change the exerior appearance of the main building mring his own and Mrs. Bank's lifetime, at he has built an extensive library in the rear in the Queen Anne style of archisciure, which forms a handsome additon to the house. The old coach road from Boston to Wooster runs in front of be dwelling, and a mfle further down ns the principal street of Waltham. About twenty acres of fine lawns surcound the house, and in the rear is the tennis court used by the younger members of the family. Inside, the rooms are large and high, and all connect with one another. The room to the right of he porch, which is now used as the ding room, was the scene of the first sdist prayer meeting ever held in Waltham, when there were no churches, and the house belonged to the Gale fam-ly, who built it. Every room has in it a old fashioned, oaken fireplace, with wooden mantels all carved and ated by hand. It is a fine old place, Gen. Banks in his declining years d consider it a desecration to make w fangled alterations about it, or to g within its venerable portals any

The other evening the Chilcothians in-vited their friends to witness a drill at Norombega hall. Those present were amply rewarded for their attendance. They saw thirty lovely damsels in tight fitting waists and kilted skirts, trimmed handsomely with white, high laced boots, with tops fastened after the hussar style, and wearing jaunty cadet caps on well poised heads.
