LANCASTER, PA., July 22, 1890.

Law Reform.

Since the days of old Herodotus but two great systems of jurisprudence have grown to maturity, for legal systems like national constitutions are not the creations of a day, but the slow growth of centuries. These systems are in active operation in all the leading civilized nations. The first, the civil law of Rome, with various local modifications and additions, lies at the foundation of the legal system of the Germanic and Latin nations of Continental Europe. The second, the common law of England, with similar local variations and supplements, is the law of the United States as well as that of Great Britain and Ireland, Australia, British India, Canada, and of all the other lands, indeed, over which Victoria, as queen and empress, reigns.

The common law, which its admirers are wont to call "the perfection of human wisdom," is simply immemorial custom crystallized in the decisions of many generations of judges, and found in England in the yearly records—the decisions of the court of queen's bench; and in this country, in our supreme court reports. In England it is modified by local custom and supplemented by acts of Parliament; in the United States, it is both modified and supplemented by statute—the acts of our several state legislatures.

The law, above all things else, should be clear and certain. Yet all of our older states have already issued many more than one hundred volumes of supreme court reports, and as we have today forty-three states, each issuing annually a large volume, the multitude of decisions and of conflicting authorities is sufficiently bewildering to drive even the oldest lawyer to the verge of insanity. It would be difficult to frame a legal proposition, not on its face idiotic, for which an industrious advocate cannot find a score of authorities. "The law," said Aaron Burr, nearly a century ago—and the bitterness of the sarcasm lies in its truth—"the law is whatever is boldly asserted and plausibly maintained." Yet, in those days, it was simplicity itself compared to its condition to-day even in New York and in spite of the code. That which should be as clear as crystal and as certain as fate is as obscure as thousands of conflicting precedents can make it and as uncertain as the tenure of human life, concerning which no man knows what a day may bring forth.

The methods of enforcing rights and redressing wrongs should be expeditious and cheap, yet the "law's delays" and the "expense of litigation" have become the people's most familiar proverbs. A right may be as clear as a cloudless summer sky and a wrong as glaring as its mid-day sun, and yet years may elapse before it is possible to enforce the one or redress the other. The most just claim may impoverish the claimant before he can secure its payment by due course of law. In the law courts, justice is continually sacrificed to form and the clearest rights held in abeyance by some ancient precedent established in another age and as wholly unsuited to modern civilization as a coat of mail to modern warfare. Parties to suits are compelled to await for weary years the argument and decision of questions of practice which they do not understand and in which they have not the slightest interest.

So, too, our criminal code and practice, especially in Pennsylvania, is fairly honeycombed with absurdities, anachronisms, obstructions to justice and loopholes for the escape of wealthy offenders. "The facility" says C. C. Bonney, esq., the president of the Illinois State Bar association, "with which mere unfortunates are converted into hopeless criminals, is equaled only by the ease with which desperate offenders baffle efforts to subject them to punishment, while they burden the community with enormous expenses of prolonged and repeated criminal trials."

These evils make justice a by-word and bring our courts year after year into more general contempt. Yet they should command, of all our institutions, the highest confidence and the most exalted respect. How shall this consummation so "devoutly to be wished" be made, instead of a forlorn hope, a living reality? Certain reforms are absolutely necessary. The judicial force should be increased so that all causes may be fully heard instead of half heard. The principles, pleadings and practice of equity should be extended to all civil cases. And in the reform of our criminal code the first step should be the abolition in all our cities of aldermen's courts and the fee system, and in their place a single recorder's court, presided over by a salaried officer who must be an educated gentleman learned in the law. This single reform would take from our overcrowded quarter sessions one-half of the petty cases which are at present returned, besides saving the taxpayers thousands of dollars every year.

These, however, are only a few of many reforms which, if brought about, would make our courts in very truth places "wherein justice is judicially administered."

War in Central America.

The war in Central America will claim more interest in the civilized world than the wars in that region have usually received, because telegraphic communication by way of Mexico has developed of recent years, and we can learn the interesting details of the struggle. Then it happens that news is dull, that public attention in this country has been drawn to our Southern neighbors by the Pan American congress and Mr. Blaine's reciprocity schemes, and that the war just begun may end in the union of five turbulent little military republics so as to form one respectable nation. It is generally observed by those familiar with Central America that it is sorely afflicted with fever, politics and generals. At present the generals are virulent, and there seems to be a fair prospect of a war involving all five republics. Little Salvador is not so weak as it may seem, for although small in territory, it is strong in population, wealth and intelligence, and seems to be well assured of the support of the two southernmost states, Nicaragua and Costa Rica. These three have always been opposed to the schemes for a Central American union agitated by Guatemala, because they feared that in any such union that state would practically hold the power. The relative size of the republics may be understood from the following:

Guatemala, sq. miles	46,800,	population	1,252,000
San Salvador	"	7,300,	"	554,000
Honduras,	"	46,500,	"	350,000
Nicaragua,	"	51,800,	"	300,000
Costa Rica	"	19,980,	"	185,000

The alliance between Guatemala and Honduras seems to make a union strong enough to overpower the others, but if Salvador has gained the first victory, as reported, the final result is very doubtful.

Brain Patching.

A mud crusher deprived an Iowa lads of an ounce of his brains last week, but the doctors say he will get along very well with what he has left. This incident opens a wonderful vista through which the imagination may harmlessly wander entranced with the prospects of a future when surgery applied to children may tap the brains of the precocious and equalize the intellectual capacity of mankind. Then mortals will be rated by the census takers according to ounces of brain and each citizen may be sternly required to get as much work as possible out of his weight of intellect. Great men can be cultivated artificially by the addition of spare ounces of brain from those who might appear top heavy. Think of the magnificent specimen of manhind which might be produced by the addition of a few ounces of brain to a youthful John Sullivan! Contemplate the adjustment of capacities to circumstances which might be affected by the donation of several ounces of mental capacity to Baby McKee! At present that infant can hardly hope to live up to his fame as it grows with him, but with the aid of a mud-crusher and a few surgeons he may, perhaps, be helped along.

THE rioting of the militia at Mount Gretna does not seem to have been of serious consequence, but tendencies of the kind cannot be too severely discouraged. If the troops should arouse the slightest fear that they could forget they are citizens while training as soldiers a strong opposition to their summer camps as a body would seem justified. Ten thousand armed men, filled with respect for the laws, make a magnificent spectacle, and there is no doubt that our militiamen are of that type, but they must give no excuse for distrust.

A sketch of the life of Abraham Harley Cassel in the Philadelphia Times, is not only interesting on account of the remarkable character of the isolated German student and collector of rare books, but chiefly because of the food for serious reflection which it affords and of the moral which adorns the tale. Mr. Cassel was born in Montgomery county, Pa., September 21st, 1820. He early developed an insatiable thirst for knowledge, which neither the prohibition of his parents—who like most of the Mennonite sect, especially in those days, held education to be an invention of the devil—nor his unfavorable surroundings, could subdue nor turn aside. The poor boy was sickly, but instead of sending him to school, and there were no free schools in those days, he was made to work in the fields. He became, therefore, his own teacher, and the story of his indefatigable pursuit of knowledge under almost insuperable difficulties is pathetic in the extreme. "He learned to write with a pen which he had made from a chicken feather by the aid of a butcher-knife. He worked long days in the woods and quarries in order to earn a few cents for books and tuition. He studied at night by the light of the fire-place, and when his father saw that his son was determined to learn, he forbade him this privilege." When he went to his cold bed-room to study, his parents deprived him of matches and candles, but he managed to purchase a box of matches for twenty-five cents, and a store-keeper kindly presented him with a pack of tallow candles and thus provided, he studied in the long winter nights in secrecy. He afterwards became a famous school teacher; and although living many miles from a railway, he collected a library of over fifty thousand volumes. He has presented thousands of these to the Pennsylvania Historical society, and to Mt. Morris college, a Dunkard institution at Mt. Morris, Ill. His library contains sixty rare Bibles and many old books of great value. He has made himself in every sense of the phrase. He is a fine linguist, a master of some of the sciences, and an authority upon the history and antiquities of his native state. What an example for the emulation of ambitious boys does such a career afford!

THE debasing effect of a pension system is fairly illustrated by the history of the Mexican war pension bill. Year after year Congress rejected this measure. At last, however, the claim agents and lobbyists proved by the tables of mortality that the soldiers of the Mexican war were nearly all dead; the war was small, the number of survivors few, and the government ought to recognize their services. This plea prevailed, and in 1887, forty years after the close of that conflict, the bill passed. What was the result? Before the 1st of March, 1889, 21,296 alleged soldiers of Mexico and 7,742 widows, making in all 29,038, had filed their claims for pensions. Now, as a close computation shows that not more than twenty thousand American soldiers of the Mexican war were alive at its close in 1847-8, and that not more than two thousand of these could possibly be alive in 1887, it is as certain as a mathematical demonstration can make it that the great majority of these claims are fraudulent. Prosecution against these claimants for perjury and the attempt to obtain money under false pretenses might have a salutary effect in checking many of the would-be robbers of the treasury.

IT is rumored in New York that John Wanamaker is negotiating for the purchase of Madison Square Garden and will turn it into a huge retail store modeled after his Philadelphia establishment. If this is true we venture the suggestion that the New York store might be made even more comprehensive than the Quaker City house by the addition of a live stock department. At John Wanamaker's you can now buy everything, from a pin to a grand piano, but there is no room for live animals, although the proprietor is known to deal indirectly in floaters by blocks of five. In Madison Square Garden he might establish a chicken department in charge of Mr. Hayes. The Harrisons might perhaps be induced to open a suburban real estate office as a branch of the establishment.

THE babies of Asbury Park had a parade two miles long on the board walk along the beach on Monday. Their carriages were decked with flowers and a brass band and bull pup headed the procession, but many of the infants howled louder than the music or the booming breakers.

BUNCOED OUT OF $5,000.

How a Winning Young Man Fleeced a Retired New Yorker.

Alanson See, an aged New Yorker who has spent several summers as a cottager at Asbury Park, was on Monday night buncoed out of $5,000 by two unknown men. Mr. See retired some years since with a small fortune earned in the business of street sprinkling in New York. Last week he met a young man of attractive and pleasant address on the fishing pier who soon succeeded, in a very clever and informal way, in engaging the old man in conversation.

The young acquaintance was of short stature and stocky build and a sandy complexion. He introduced himself as a son of the senior member of the firm of Park & Tilford. He was well dressed and a good talker, and soon he and Mr. See were on terms of intimacy. The clever swindler narrated what he claimed to be a portion of his history, in which he so interested his aged listener that the old man gave him a short account of himself.

This intimacy continued for some days, until last Saturday Mr. See was induced to go to a house on one of the avenues, when he was introduced to a second swindler, and induced to take part in a game which he describes as somewhat similar to faro. He became very much interested in the game, and was informed after he had taken a hand that he had won forty dollars. This so elated him that he determined to play more heavily.

Monday morning, in company with his pseudo-acquaintance of the pier, the old man went to New York to procure money for further play. He parted with his companion in the metropolis, the latter pretending to go to see some wealthy relatives in order to procure money for himself.

Mr. See drew $5,000 from his account at the Irving National bank, after which he met his companion and returned with him to Asbury Park. He was again taken to the house, the whereabouts of which he is unable to place, where play was resumed and where he speedily dropped his entire sum of $5,000. He made a vigorous kick for the return of his money, but was cast adrift by the sharpers.

The particulars of the outrage were telegraphed to Inspector Byrnes, of New York, and to the chief of police of Philadelphia, by the local authorities, in whose hands the matter has been placed.

PENSION HISTORY.

A Sermon On An Indignity to Our Soldiers.

The Philadelphia Record, of the 19th inst., published a tabulated statement of the expenditures of the government for pensions from 1861 to 1889 inclusive, taken from the report of the commissioner of pensions for 1889, and also certain pertinent conclusions based upon this statement taken from a pamphlet copy of a sermon, entitled "An Indignity to Our Citizen Soldiers," preached in the First Parish church, Cambridge, Massachusetts, June 1, 1890, by Edward H. Hall.

The figures of the statement show that our pension list is like a snow ball gathering in volume as it rolls.

The amount distributed directly to the soldiers constitutes only a fraction, never estimated at over 72 per cent., of the entire appropriations. As the expenses of the pension bureau increase enormously with the increasing outlay, and as pensions already granted are themselves subject to constant increase and re-rating (in 1888-1889, 2,514 pensions were re-rated), it is evident that our present annual appropriation is but a tithe, even though no new pension bill is ever enacted, of what the country will by and by be called upon to pay. With these figures before us it is quite possible to believe the appalling statement of an eminent member of Congress, Hon. J. C. Tarsney, of Missouri, who said in a speech delivered in the House of Representatives, April 21, 1890: "The annual expenditure for pensions has not yet reached by any reasonable approximation one-third of the maximum which it will reach under existing laws; and, although there should not be an additional pension law passed, or an amendment to existing laws enacted, under the law as it exists and as it is administered the annual cost to the government five years hence on account of pensions will almost as an absolute certainty exceed $300,000,000." This he considers "a very conservative estimate. Since these calculations were made the dependent pension bill has been signed by the president, adding at least $40,000,000 to the annual outlay."

REASON WHY.

She was smart and she was pretty, and her elders thought her witty, and she tripped the light fantastic like a fay.
She could read both French and Latin, and was sweet in print or satin, and 'twould make your bosom heave to hear her play.
But in single life she tarried, and she never, never married, and she'll doubtless be a maiden till she dies.
For she bade a proud defiance to the culinary science, and she never knew the mystery of pies.

But Jack said he would—that they might be assured.

SWIFT'S SPECIFIC.

MERCURIAL RHEUMATISM.

Mr. J. C. Jones, city marshal of Fulton, Arkansas, writes: "About ten years ago I contracted a severe case of blood poison. The leading physicians of the city were called in, and they prescribed medicine after medicine, which I took without affording me any relief. I also tried mercurial and potash remedies, with the same unsuccessful result, but which brought on an attack of mercurial rheumatism that made my life one of untold agony. After suffering four months, I gave up all former remedies and commenced taking Swift's Specific (S. S. S.) After taking several bottles, I was entirely cured and able to resume work. I consider Swift's Specific (S. S. S.) the greatest medicine for blood poisoning to-day on the market."

INHERITED SCROFULA.

Swift's Specific (S. S. S.) cured my little boy of hereditary scrofula, which broke out all over his face. For a year he had suffered, and I had given up all hopes of his recovery, when at length I was induced to use S. S. S. After using a few bottles he was entirely cured. Not a symptom now remains of the disease. This was three years ago.

LIQUOR HABIT.
In All the World there is but One Cure.
DR. HAINES' GOLDEN SPECIFIC.
It can be given in a cup of coffee or tea, or in articles of food, without the knowledge of the patient, if necessary; it is absolutely harmless and will effect a permanent and speedy cure, whether the patient is a moderate drinker or an alcoholic wreck. IT NEVER FAILS. It operates so quietly and with such certainty that the patient undergoes no inconvenience, and ere he is aware, his complete reformation is effected. 48 page book of particulars free.
