Blaine's Diplomacy. Secretary Blaine from having become almost a forgotten number in the politi-cal field has of late succeeded in attracting the chief amount of public atten-tion. His appearance in the tariff discussion has been a brilliant one ; but this can hardly be said of his figure in the seal negotiation. In the former he took a very definite position, and it is easy to see where he stands and what he means ; but, on the seal fishery question be does not take a firm stand anywhere, and where he will finally land is very uncertain. Doubtless he does not know himself : and is subject to instructions from the course of events and of public opinion. The diplomatic correspondence on this question is a good sample of the regulation kind, whose chief aim is to multiply words and play hide and seek under their cover.

The correspondence transmitted to Congress is so voluminous that the most condensed thorough summaries of it fill several columns. The point of vital importance at this moment is that Mr. Blaine insists upon the right of the United States to protect the scal fisheries while negotiations are pending, and that Lord Salisbury denies this and is evidently disposed to go to violent extremities in protecting Canadian scalers from United States revenue vessels, which he holds have no more right to seize ressels in Behring sea than they would have on the broad Pacific.

Mr. Blaine makes several strong points against the British diplomats, and displays his famous brilliancy, but after all he leaves it doubtful whether he knows our rights in Behring's Sea, "and knowing dare maintain them." That body of water is, or is not a closed sea. If it is Mr. Blaine should say so, giving his reasons, and firmly ordering British and Canadians off the premises There is no use in awaiting negotiations or juggling with smooth phrases, for if it is our sea we mean to take care of it in spite of grumbling Canadians or brow-beating Britishers. If it is not a closed sea our revenue cutters have no isiness to seize foreign vessels beyond the three mile limit unless upon the ground that it is our seal fishery, just as pertain pearl fisheries far away from land belong to England and as fishing banks are held by other nations. Instead of boldly maintaining positive rights like these, Mr. Blaine, although e alludes to them; seems to base his whole position on the propriety of preserving a species of seal for the benefit mankind. He discusses an international agreement for the protection of a fishery which we have leased as though it were our own, and pending this discustion he wants to do the protecting.

Labor-Saving Machinery. When George Stephenson, in spite of every obstacle, demonstrated to an adverse parliament the immense advantages or the locomotive and the railway over the stage coach and the turnpike ; and when the paddle-wheels of our own Fulton's "Clermont," smote to shamed silence the jeering lips of his ignorant detractors, the dawn of modern material civilization began. But neither of these men, however great his imagination, could see the full " vision of the future and the wonders that would be." They never dreamed that their inventions would cause the vast changes, in so many directions, which have since taken place; or, that they would lie at the foundation of an era of centralization. Yet our improved methods of transportation, the result of their inventions. have made possible the utilization of the infinite variety of labor-saving machinery, the infinite divisions and sub-divisions of labor, and the concentration of industry in the large cities. This, in its turn, has caused the concentration of population in the cities, and of wealth in fewer hands; it has caused the increase in the number of large farms and the decrease in the number of small ones. and even lies at the foundation of the concentration of political power in the hands of the central government at the expense of the reserved rights of the states, and of the concentration of many states under one government.

Under the old system of transportation, in wagons over bad roads, the modern factory would of course have been impossible. Its products must be dis-tributed among many thousands and even millions of consumers, and this under the old system would have been so costly that it would overcome many times the advantage gained by expensive labor-saving machinery, by the subdivision of labor and by the production of great quantities in one factory. Thus it was cheaper for each community to manufacture, even in the most primitive manner, its own goods as each did only half a century ago. What an immense industrial revolution, therefore, have the inventions of Stephenson and Fulton brought about ! Hon. Albert S. Bolles, chief of the bureau of statistics, presents us with a few striking examples of the advantages derived by modern society from labor-saving machinery. "One person in a cotton mill," he says, "will annually spin and weave cotton cloth enough for two hundred and fifty persons, and in a woolen mill for fifty more. One person with a hand-loom could weave from forty-two to forty-eight yards daily; with six power looms his product is increased to fifteen hundred. One person in a man's boot factory will annually make sixteen hundred pairs of boots or shoes, and in a woman's shoe factory, three thousand pairs. One man with a cotton gin can do the work of nine hundred and ninety-nine men by hand in removing seed from cotton. One man in Dakota can annually produce fitty-five hundred bushels of wheat and retaining one thousand bushels for seed, the remainder, by labor equivalent to that of one man for one year, can be manufactured into flour and put into barrels. The forty-five hundred bushels will make a thousand barrels, which can be transported to New York by rail by two men during the same period. Moreover, the four thus engaged would have time left to keep the machinery of the farm, the mill and the railroad in repair. Three more in a year could bake this quantity into bread; and as the annual ration for a person is a barrel of flour, the farm hand, the miller, the two carriers and the three bakers could supply thousand persons with bread."

aborers out of employment, because end employ countless skilled laborers who would not otherwise have been employed, save in the crudest primary services. The best example of this truth is found in the history of the greatest of all inventions, when in 1450 this great event made possible our modern civilization, books were few and readers fewer; they were costly, for it required a lifetime of hard labor were rare, for only kings, great nobles and the highest dignitaries in the church could afford to own them.

By the invention of printing, the few monkish copyists, who supplied the very limited medieval demand, were of course thrown out of employment; but o! in their place arose thousands upon housands of printers. In addition to the myriads of periodicals published in works, many of them running through

STRANGE are the changes in public opinion - the revenges wrought by the points of attack of industrial reformers and especially of all labor organizations was the combination of great capitalists known ago, to all who think seriously upon eco nomic questions, to be an unmitigated evil. Their obvious purpose seemed to be to crush out competition, which was a blessing, and despotically control the prices of commodities, which would prove a public curse. This was everywhere the argument of labor reformers. But a change has come over the spirit of their dream.

Competition wears no longer so lovely a face, and the concentration of production in a few 'ands possesses no longer a frightful mien. The Journal of the Knights of Labor, one of the ablest of the periodicals devoted to the interests of organized workingmen, declares in a recent issue, that as trusts are in line with the tendency of the age, it is useless to oppose them. This is an era of centralization, of the concentration of population, wealth and power, and in Franklin's not very elegant but forcible phrase, "be who spits against the wind spits in his own face."

"It is an infinitely simpler matter" says the Journal, "to deal with ten monopolists than with ten thousand people having small and scattered interests. Moreover, every one of the class of small business men and capitalists who is crushed out by inability to compete with the large and highly organized concerns, from being an opponent, becomes a friend to the cause of social reorganization. The fewer that are interested in maintaining the capitalistic system and the more whose obvious welfare lies in forcing a readjustment of conditions, the more easily can a change be

All this sounds very well, and seems clear and sensible. The only difficulty lies in the fact that economic conditions so large as those of our time and country are not "forced to a readjustment." They are, like constitutions, the result of slow growth, and no man, not even the ablest labor editor, can fortell their issue. The present era may be one of transition from the competitive to some other and better system, but it is imposible to predict what that system will be, for the simple reason that we cannot know even its factors and controlling forces. A single invention as great as was that of the locomotive in its day, would be sufficient to change all the economic tendencies of the age. Electrical science for example, is in its infancy.

Who can tell what it may yet bring forth?

On a little shelf in front of him was a pair of sabres ready for instant use in an emergency requiring hand-to-hand fighting, and a powerful field-glass for detecting an enemy at long range swung on a pivot in such a way as to command a view of the landscape in every direction. The driver of the wagon, as heavily armed as the nature of his duties would permit, sat in a bomb-proof inclosure and guided the horses by means of lines passing through portholes in front, while the athlete who occupied the responsible and dangerous position at the rear of the wagon and delivered the ice to customers was equipped with bottles of vitriol for defensive use, and wore under his outer garnents a suit of chain armor that had belonged once to a base ball umpire.

Under the watchful protection of the guard on the roof the wagon had stopped tomers in perfect safety, and as the driver turned down a wide street in a thickly settled portion of the town, with few per-sons in sight except children at play, the vigitance of the trio in charge of the ice wagon relaxed and a sense of security stole over them.

saving invention.

The old notion that these and similar wonderful labor-saving inventions threw this was their first effect, has long since been exploded. On the other hand, it is seen by the laborers themselves that they make possible the production of untold wealth which would not other-of horsemen dashed out of it with a wild yell, half a dozen lassoct flew throught o air, and before they could recover from their confusion the guard on the roof and the man on the rear step of the wagon were dragged from their posts, thrown to the ground and bound with ropes. This done, a part of the gang opened fire with revolvers on the bombproof casemate where the driver sat and succeeded in occupying his attention while the others with crowbars and sledge hammers forced open the iron doors in the rear.

The plans of the daring robbers had been laid with great care, and in less time than it takes to tell of it they had succeeded in their desperate undertaking, and were on their way out of the town with their booty, a chunk of ice weighing at least 10 pounds, carefully wrapped in a blanket.

The knowledge that the news of the robbery would be flashed through the place and telegraphed far and wide, accompanied by offers of large rewards for their capture, dead or alive, lent wings to the fleeling villains. They had held up many a train on the plains of Texas and in the rocky fastnesses of Missouri, but had never engaged before in a scheme of plunder on so gigantic a scale, and they rode from the scene of their exploit with the wild haste of men fleeing for their lives.

In a little clearing in the heart of a dense wood, miles and miles from the town they had invaded, these men halted at last.

Turning their jaded animals loose, they gathered eagerly about their prize. Unrolling it with the utmost care, they feasted their eyes on its glittering outlines, and with hands trembling with excitement, they prepared to divide.

The fact that the sale of Dr. Pierce's Pleasant Purgative Pelicts excels that of any other pill in the market, be it great or small, is on account of the fact that they are tiny, little, sugar coated granules, and that in most cases one little "Peliet" is sufficient for a dose; that they are purely vegetable and perfectly harmless; and for constipation, billousness, sick headache and all diseases arising from derangement of the liver, stomach or bowels, they are absolutely a specific. Scrofula in Children. "In the early part of 1887 scrofula appeared on the head of my little grandchild, then only 18 months old. Shortly after breaking out it spread rapidly all over her body. The scabs on the sores would peal off on the slightest touch, and the odor that would arise would make the atmosphere of the room sickening and unbearable. The disease next attacked the eyes and we feared she would lose her sight. Eminent physicians of the country were consulted, but could do nothing to relieve the little insocent, and gave it as their opinion, that the case was hopeless and impossible to save the child's eyesight." It was then that we decided to try Swift's Specific (S. S. S.) That medicine at once made a speedy and complete cure. For more than a vear past she has been as healthy as any child in the land."
