ADDRESS, THE INTELLIGENCER,

LANCASTER, PA., July 30, 1890.

A Plea For Purity. constitution of the United States les that "Congress shall make no . . abridging the freedom of sech or of the press." [Amendment
In the constitution of Pennsylvathis freedom is not only guaranteed defined. [Declaration of Rights, tion VII.] It consists of the right to iblish public records, and to um freely and print fully every man's opinions upon science, art, philsophy, religion or human life; and fin-illy, it declares that "no conviction hall be had in any prosecution for the any matter proper for public investiga-tion or information, where the fact that uch publication was not maliciously ligently made shall be established the satisfaction of the jury." This ves, it is true, a wide margin for judislal construction, but the interpretation of the courts has been consistent with the spirit of the age and in no land is the press more free. That this unrestrained liberty has not been abused, that an unicensed press has not been at times licentious, even the most radical Democrat will not affirm. But the remedy be found not in restraining laws but in the strong curb of enlightened and refined public opinion. "From the day on which the emaucipation of our Macaulay, "the purification of our literature began." The old English ensing act did not restrain licentiouss, for it was virtue, not vice, that the public licenser suppressed. He muti-lated Paradise Lost, but he had no scruples in sanctioning such a play as The Country Wife, She Would If She Could, or a translation of the fourth book of Lucretius. The press is not licentious because it is free, but because

But it is more than a mere mirror. It is the parent of the people as well as their child, their teacher as well as their pupil, for it forms its readers just as surely as in turn it is formed by them. Hence the large and ever growing rensibility of its conductors, g responaponsibility which is too frequently ignored For perfect as the press is as a teacher of morality by precept, it is only too often open to the severest censure as a teacher of vice by example. Why should a public journal be allowed by public inion to become the common school of iniquity? Why should it be permitted to keep its readers immersed daily foul details drawn from th criminal courts, from the lowest dens of vice, and from the vile records of the pre-eminent in crime, and often in the very language of the deprayed, or worse still, detailed with all the alluring and seductive art of accomplished writers?

the people who support it are impure.

It is their mirror, faithfully reflecting their virtues and vices, their prejudices, tastes and opinions. It presents in vivid and realistic colors their daily history. Nothing is too contemptible for its notice, nothing too exalted for its

"Vice is a monster of so frightful mien, As, to be hated, needs but to be seen; Yet, seen too off, familiar with her face. We first endure, then pity, then embrace.

"Words which none dare utter in decent society and deeds which even their vile authors seek to hide, are rehearsed in the free press as daily lessons to thousands who would otherwise be wholly unfamiliar with such teachings. That familiarity with vice which all are thus compelled to suffer, must needs, from the law of association, lead many to 'first endure, then pity, then em-

But it is said "newspapers must print what the public demands, or they will be thrown aside and lose their patronage." "It is undoubtedly true." ays one of these journals, "that publication of all the incidents deircumstances of great crimes has a ricious effect in exciting the imagions of weak readers; but a newsr that is worthy of the name can ore help printing the details of res scandals, etc., than it can scandals, etc., than it can from printing reports of great or European wars." This is neyed excuse of every publisher his columns with the details of der, erime and burglary, and use of all who pander to the ir fellow men. The keepers of low dives and gambling furnish what the public ands. But these people are kept out of decent homes. Compared to them leprosy itself would be welcomed. But not so the newspaper. It enters everywhere and is greeted by every eye. Boys and girls at the most critical age, when their imaginations are most lively and their minds most susceptible to powerful and permanent as, are often influenced by such prints as these in a manner little dreamed of by their parents. This evil, which is growing, should be plucked out root and anch. An enlightened public opinion should demand a pure press, and every careful father and refined mother should allow only clean newspapers to enter the household.

The Lesson From Argentine.

The rebellion in the Argentine repub-lic has had many ups and downs in the few days since it was first announced by cable. The news comes very quickly from that far off country, and Buenos Ayres seems really very much nearer to us than noisy Central America, where battles may be fought by the dozen weeks before we hear of them. The Argentine fighting began on Saturday, and as regiment after regiment deserted to the rebels and the navy finally turned against the government, the success of the revolt seemed assured. The minister of finance was a prisoner, and the president and the rest of his cabinet seemed to have been caught like rats in a hole without the least hope of escape. Now suddenly a dispatch arrives, signed by Garcia, the nance minister, announcing his own dease and the sudden mysterious triumph of the government and giving a detailed statement of the terms of ice. This is hardly in type before news comes of another complete reversal of the situation. Garcia spoke too soon, for the peace negotiations are abruptly broken by the unexpected arrival of re-inforcements for the Union Civica, as the revolutionary party is called. At noon on Tuceday fighting was resumed, the forces of the government retreated and the war ships furiously bombarded the government house, but soon it is an-nounced that the rebels are out of ammunition, the squadron ceases firing and the attacking columns retire. It is announced that the victorious Union Civica has practically yielded because the leaders would not allow their men to attack with the bayonet. "They preferred to risk their own lives rather than to authorize such terrible bloodshed." That is the curious way the dispatches put it, but the fact is that a bayonet charge against modern rapid firing arms means useless massacre, General Grant even foretold the abandonment of the bayonet, arguing that troops could never get close enough to use it. Before we go to press the situation may turn another somersault, and by the capture of a magazine or some other lucky stroke the Union Civica may come out on top. All these important and startling events have happened within four days, and the result of them should make Americans thoughtful. Although our direct relations with the Argentiue are slight, we have an interest in that most thrifty and promising of Southern lands, for it comes losest to us in natural features and resources and has emulated our political example. It has broad prairies, which are being rapidly turned to wheat and pasture lands by an active European immigration, and its people have in spite of the hotter blood of the Latin races show a firm determination to secure strong and orderly government and to steadily progress in civilization. Buenos Ayres is a thriving wide awake modern city with world wide commerce and vast ambitions. The trouble that has come upon this strong young country is ascribed to the reckless financiering and stubborn domineering spirit of the party in power. The nation has advanced since the days when the tyrant Rosa as proudly harnessed the women of the capital to the chariot of his beautiful daughter. Manualita, in its triumphal progress. Such arrogance would not now be dreamt of, but men in power have tried to rule as Speaker Reed and Mr. Lodge would rule in our country, by rules and force bills.

We, too, are seriously threatened by reckless financiering, and the desperate efforts of those in power to retain that power in spite of the people and the laws. Events drift rapidly. Men deceive themselves with hopes that all will turn out well. The majority in Congress at the order of reckless leaders reverses the ballot choice of Southern states, and Northerners fail to reflect how they would take an application of the same practice to them. The idea of bayonets at the polls is calmly surveyed because no one applies it to our own ballot boxes, but these are signs of dark times and need to be heeded. The reckless financiering in the Argentine can be no worse than that of our own government, although they have reached the end of their string and our spendthrifts have just made a wild beginning. There is a lesson for us in Argentine troubles.

An esteemed correspondent of the In-TELLIGENCER calls our attention to the fact that the temperature in London on July 6th, of this year, was very nearly the same as it was on January 6th, and that we were therefore in error when we stated that the "worst of our own capitals are nearly, if not altogether, as hot, dusty and uncomfortable." They are certainly not so this year, as our correspondent has very conclu sively proven, but then he will admit that this is an exceptional year. And perhaps we should have omitted foggy, damp London from our list of hot, dusty cities although the adjective "uncomfortable is certainly applicable. Think of a city in which a sight of the sun is so rare that when it does appear the natives photograph it so as not to forget how it looks. So, at least Max O'Rell, says, and as all the world knows, a Freughman couldn't tell a fib about the English even if he tried.

THE prizes won by the pupils at the Burlington school for girls, in London, were presented by Mrs. Gladstone on the 11th inst., after an eloquent address by the ex-premier, full of wisdom and of sympathy with the cause of the higher education of women. Mr. Gladstone spoke of the vast and beneficent changes in the condition and prospects of women which had taken place in his own lifetime. He told the bright young girls before him that when they reached womanbood they would enter upon a life of enlarged opportunities and responsibilities almost unknown to their mothers, and altogether undreamed of by their grandmothers, with whom he and the lady who would distribute the prizes were contemporaries, These changes, he believed, were nearly all for the better, but upon many others which were at present agitated, and to which so many people looked with enthusiasm, he could only say that they neither met with his approval nor with a sanguine expectation of happy results. He entertained hopes of great things, however, from her higher education, and believed that her present opportunities in this regard should be greatly enlarged; but he warned his auditors against all innovations which threatened to take woman out of the sphere for which she was manifestly intended by God and nature. No laws or regulations of man can bestow upon her higher duties than those of motherhood and of the formation of character. In the latter especially her influence was preeminent. All education, human life itself, is successful only in se far as it tends to form a high and noble character. For this are we sent into the world, and in this work of forming character, woman finds her truest and most exalted sphere.
After her husband's address, Mrs. Gladstone presented the prizes, kissing many of the pupils to whom she gave them.

Murderous Act of a Negro Who Had Been Refused Money. Been Refused Money.

At 4:30 o'clock Tuesday morning, Mrs. Charles R. York and her mother, Mrs. Mc-Ciellan, living at Bengies, Md., 12 miles from Baltimore, were murderously assaulted. They were asleep at the time. Horrible wounds were inade upon the left forebead of each woman. Mrs. York is in a critical condition, and Mrs. McClellan, who is 75 years old, is expected to die. Jas. Moeks, a half-witted laborer employed on the farm, fled toward the city after the assault.

Tuesday morning about 3 o'clock Mr. York left for Baltimore, leaving Meeks and the two ladies in the house. Meeks went to their rooms and struck them with the butt end of an axe while they were asleep. He was captured on the outskirts of Baltimore this morning. He acknowledged striking the women, saying:

"I did not intend to kill them: I only wished to hurt them. I struck them both on the forehead and both were unconscious when I left them. The trouble grew out of some money matters. I asked Mrs. York for some money, which she refused me, and I struck her and her mother."

Emit Huber sacrifices Ris Life.

John Morrow, aged 10 years, and Emil Huber, aged 13, were drowned in the Susquehanna river, at Pittaton, on Tuesday. The two boys, with other companions, were in the water, though they could not swim. At the point where they were, the big pipes of the Spring Brook Water company cross the river, and owing to the low state of the river, the pipes are out of the water near the shore. The boys were amusing themselves by running along the pipes, when the little Morrow boy slipped off and shot into the water.

Young Huber attempted to save him, but the ripos were slippery and he plunged head first into the water after the boy he was trying to save. The water just at this point was ten feet deep. The boys being unable to swim were drowned. A large number of boats were put off, and after an hour's work the bodies were recovered.

Civil and Criminal Sults to Be Entered.

Scrofula in Children.

"In the early part of 1887 scrofula appeared on the head of my little grandehild, then only is months old. Shortly after breaking out it spread rapidly all over her body. The scabs on the sores would peal off on the slightest touch, and the odor that would arise would make the atmosphere of the room sickening and unbearable. The disease next attacked the eyes and we feared she would lose her sight. Eminent physicians of the country were consuited, but could do nothing to relieve the little innocent, and gave it as their opinion, that the case was hopeless and impossible to save the child's eyesight. It was then that we decided to try Swift's Specific (S. S. S.) That medicine at once made a speedy and complete cure. For more than a year past she has been as bealthy as any child in the land."

Cancer of the Nose.

In 1875 a sore appeared on my nose, and grew rapidly. As my father had cancer, and my husband died of it, I became alarmed and consuited my physician. His treatment did no good, and the sore grew larger and worse in every way, until I was persuaded to take S. S. S. and a few bottles cured me. This was after all the doctors and other medicines had failed. I have had no return of the cancer.

This 7c Gingham, was 10c only a little time back. Very likely no better quality is now loc, or more, in some stores. The wonder is to find it at 7c. Good for service, safe to wash, heavy enough for careless wear in careless places, and sightly enough for any Gingham turn-out. Medium colors, mostly plain, a few stripes.

A little coarser, a wink less of style, perhaps, and you have the 6c Ginghams; or, one step fineness, and noticeably more art, and there's the 10c line-a long one.
