into the Rue St. Dennis and the Rue St. Martin, of the superb lamp-posts have been thrown down, the people erected barricades, by tearing up the se barricades were soon carried by the munior unese particades were soon carried by the muni-cipal guards and troops; but at some of them severe engagements took place, notwithstanding the peo-ple were almost entirely unarmed. The markets, the Place de la Concorde, the Place du Carrousel, llevards, the Rue St. Honore, and an immember number of other streets and places were oc-cupied by the troops—in fact, the whole of Paris was occupied, as if civil war had been everywhere raging. The troops remained with their arms in their hands all night.

As I supped into the Rue St. Dennis, the dragoon who were stationed close by the Porte, received orders to charge, and I saw them gallop down the street at a rapid rate, with their drawn swords gleaming in the sun. At the same moment, de-tachments of light dragoons and infantry hastened after them. From this it was clear that additional assistance was required against the people in that quarter. On leaving the Rue St. Dennis, I saw a vast multitude approaching, headed by a red flag. From the haste with which they advanced, it was plain that they were being pursued by the military. our ago I observed artillery advancing owards the Boulevards, with the object no doubt Paris, Thursday Louis Phillippe has abdicated in favor of the Count de Paris. The Duke of Nemours proposed as Regent, and rejected. It was proposed by d Dillion Barrot that a Regency should be formed under the Duchess of Orleans until the Count de Paris should obtain his majority, but this has been rejected, and a Republic insisted upon. The Duchess of Orleans and the Count de Paris went to the Chamber at half-past one, accompanied by the horseback. The Duchess was in deep mourning.

Four o'clock—The Duchess de Orleans, the Count de Paris, and the Duke de Nemours had been at the Chamber of Deputies, and have been rejected by the Chamber and the people, who penetrated into the Chamber. At half-past 4 it was hoped that the worst was over. About half-past 7, the Boulevard being then crowded, there arrived a column of the combatants, many of them armed with muskets, and singing the Marseillaise and the chorus of the Girondins which I have so often mentioned. They were received with uprourious felicitations by the people, and proceeded to the office of the National, which seems to be the express of the fear in the control of the seems to be the express of the fear in the control of the seems to be the express of the fear in the control of the seems to be the express of the fear in the control of the seems to be the express of the fear in the control of the seems to be the express of the fear in the control of the seems to be the express of the fear in the control of the seems to be the express of the fear in the control of the seems to be the express of the seems to be the express of the seems to be the express of the seems to be the expression of the Creed. They demanded that the editors see that Wesley's Sermons. their liberties were not 'again" played with. M.' Marrast, principal editor of the National, harangued them from the balcony, and assured them that their liberties would this time be secured. This scene was repeated six times during the night.

At 10 o'clock, a column of 600 or 800 people of all ranks, who had been fighting passed up the Boulevard. Among them were evidently many of the Communistes, and, possibly, some of those malefactors, who will mix in all popular movements. The bearing and attitude of this column was terrible. The subsequent act of one of the party justified the apprehension which their ap ance suggested

Although M. Guizot had retired from the mini try, the Hotel des Affaires Estrangeres remained occapied and guarded by troops. About 10 o clock a young man walked up to the officer in command and blew his brains out with a pistol. Seeing him fall his soldiers without orders fired on the people

The report of this discharge, at a moment when we flattered ourselves that all was tolerably well over, created a painful sensation. Twenty minutes afterwards, however, a most touching and melancholy procession arrived, and, as far as I could per turned alarm into rage.

The buzz of an approaching multitude coming from the Boulevard des Capucines was heard, and chorus, the noise of wheels could be heard. A large body of the people slowly advanced. Four in front carried torches. Behind them came an open cart surrounded by torch-bearers. The light was strong, and discovered four or five dead hodies ressed, which appeared to have been When the head of the column reached the con ner of the Rue Lepelletier, the song was changed to a burst of fury, which will not be soon forgotten by those who heard it. The procession halted at the office of the National, and the whole party burs nto a unanimous shrick or cry of Vengeance!-You know how sonorous is that word when pro-nounced in French. The dead bodies in the cart were those of the men who fell under the fire of the soldiers above mentioned.

This event is deplorable. It may possibly change the issue of the affair. The night was an awful one. The noise of workmen appeared to break on the stillness. Having heard a similar one in 1830, I guessed what was going on. Barricades—one immensely strong at the end of the Rue Richelieu—were in progress of construction. This has continued up to this moment (half-past 10.) Every tree on the whole line of the Bonleyant has been felled. Every one
